DRLIT-UA 113 Modern Drama: (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
A study of the origins and development of the two most influential dramatic movements of this century. After noting such antecedents as 19th-century melodrama and the well-made play, we concentrate on the plays and theories of Gerhart Hauptmann, Henrik Ibsen, Anton Chekhov, August Strindberg, ?mile Zola, and others. The social and psychological focus of these playwrights is discussed in terms of philosophical influences (Hegel, Kierkegaard, Nietzsche, Darwin) as well as in relation to important theatrical theorists, models, and institutions (Andre Antoine and the Theatre Libre, Konstantin Stanislavski and the Moscow Art Theatre). The continuing vitality of realism, as well as significant mutations of and modifications to it, are traced throughout the century.

DRLIT-UA 256 Asian American Theater (4 Credits)
This course acts as both an introduction to the genre of Asian American theatre and an interrogation into how this genre has been constituted. Through a combination of play analysis and historical discussion, starting with Frank Chen's The Chickencoop Chinaman, the first Asian American play produced in a mainstream venue, the class looks at the ways Asian American drama and performance intersect with a burgeoning Asian American consciousness. We review the construction of Asian American history through such plays as Genny Lim's Paper Angels and more recent works such as Chay Yew's A Language of Their Own. We also read theoretical and historical texts that provide the basis for a critical examination of the issues surrounding Asian American theatre. Orientalism, media representation, and theories of genealogy inform our discussion.

DRLIT-UA 293 Theatre of Latin America (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
An introduction to the history, theories, and practices of Latin American drama, focusing on the 20th century. We pay special attention to the historical reinvention of European-based theatrical forms in the Americas through their continuous interaction with non-European cultural forms. Through the plays of leading dramatists including Jorge D'az, Egon Wolff, Sergio Vodanovic (Chile), Jos? Triana (Cuba), Ren? Marquez and Luis Rafael S?nchez (Puerto Rico), Isaac Chocr?n (Venezuela), Emilio Carballido, Luisa Josefin? Hern?dez, Sabina Berman, Elena Garro (Mexico), Osvaldo Draghn, Eduardo Pavlovsky, Roberto Cossa, and Griselda Gambaro (Argentina). We explore the significance of modernist and postmodernist dramatic forms in cultures where industrial modernity is an insecure social context. We study the wealth of oppositional theatre in Latin America exemplified by Augusto Boal's ?theatre of the oppressed??in relation to the historical use (or abuse) of theatrical spectacle as a political means to control peoples, from the early Spanish conquerors to recent authoritarian state leaders. We read postcolonial Latin American theories of culture and art, such as hybridity, transculturation, Brazil's modernist and anticolonial antropofagia, and the ?aesthetics of hunger? in the works of Fernando Ortiz, Angel Rama, and N?stor Garcia Canclini, among others. We consider ?magical realism? in the theatre as a social poetics of scarcity.

DRLIT-UA 304 Theatre and its Institutions (4 Credits)
Culture and administration: these terms share a long and undulating history. Churches and state governments, robber barons and revolutionaries, commercial producers and non-profit theatre artists: each have sought to erect and to manage institutions of artistic output at different times and for different ends. In this course, we will consider a range of theories and interdisciplinary performance practices, and invite some special guests – curators, artistic directors, organizers, theatre makers – to help us think in different ways about the relations between theatre and performance practices and the institutions that house them. We will investigate more traditional forms of theatre administration as well as some new forms of experimental organization in order to critically question both the aesthetics and politics of the institutional practices of theatre. Some topics addressed in this course could include: performance curation, theatre festivals, commercial theatre, non-profit theatre, theatre and public policy.

DRLIT-UA 9133 Modern Drama & Performance in London (4 Credits)
The course examines the main features of modern drama from the late nineteenth century to the present day. Each week there is a theatre visit to see plays from the period in a number of different venues across the city: for example, the National Theatre, the Royal Court, selected West End houses, non-theatre spaces converted for performance, and site specific locations. The productions are chosen to illustrate the immense variety of work produced in theatre during the twentieth century and current today. They also provide excellent examples of contemporary techniques in theatre making, ranging from interpretations of traditional dramas and comedies, new writing, physical theatre, musicals, cross media pieces, and other alternative forms. Significant aspects of modern drama are also considered in class through examples on DVDs, examination of critical reviews, and analysis of additional texts where appropriate.

DRLIT-UA 9502 French Culture & Cinema (4 Credits)
On December 28th, 1895, cinema was given its official characteristics by the Lumière brothers in Paris. If for over a century, the “Seventh Art” has been an essential element and a vehicle for French culture, the city of Paris has epitomized the evolution and contradictions of the French cinema industry. Focusing on the main tendencies in contemporary French cinema, we will ask the following questions: How do the French filmmakers depict the city of Lights, the City of Love, the City of Horror? How decisive a representation of Paris and its suburbs can be? Why do the images of Paris illustrate the history of French cinema? What do they show about French culture?

DRLIT-UA 9412 Shakespeare and the Elizabethan Stage: Text and Performance (4 Credits)
This course provides an introduction to the dramatic work of Shakespeare and his contemporaries. Students read and attend representative comedies, tragedies, and histories, their selection to be determined by the plays actually in production in and around London, particularly at the Barbican, New Globe, and Stratford to which at least one excursion will be made. Special attention will be given to the playhouses and the influence they had on the art of the theatre, actors’ companies, and modes of production and performance. Lectures and discussions will focus on the aesthetic quality of the plays, their relationship with the audiences (then and now), the application of the diverse attitudes and assumptions of modern critical theory to the Elizabethan stage, the contrasting structures of Shakespearean and non-Shakespearean drama, the new emphasis on selfhood and individuality, and the major themes of hierarchy, order, and justice, the conflict of Nature and Fortune, the role of Providence, the ideals of love, and the norms of social accord. Opportunities will be given to investigate the interrelations of the plays and other arts, including film, opera, and ballet.
