GLOBAL CHINA STUDIES
(GCHN-SHU)

GCHN-SHU 101 Introduction to Chinese Civilization (4 Credits)
Typically offered every year
This course provides an introduction to Chinese civilization from ancient times to the present. With a focus on inter-cultural and inter-ethnic interactions, we will explore three sets of questions that are central to the understanding of Chinese civilization. China is frequently seen as a culturally and ethnically homogenous society, but is this view historically accurate? How did Chinese interactions with cultural, ethnic, and racial others shape the evolution of Chinese civilization, and how did these interactions impact the trajectory of world history? How might considering heterogeneity help us better understand China and Chinese identity, and how have these concepts changed over time? Over the course of the semester, we will read historical texts from China’s major dynasties and trace changing conceptions of Chinese civilization and Chinese identity. Prerequisite: None. Fulfillment: CORE HPC/IPC; HPC or IPC; GCS Elective Chinese History, Society, and Culture.

GCHN-SHU 108 THE WORLD OF YUNNAN: Culture, History, and Life Along China’s Southwestern Borderlands (4 Credits)
Typically offered every year
This course surveys the history, culture, and diversity of Yunnan, China. From the ancient bronzes of the Dian Kingdom to the province’s recent rise as a tourist destination, students will encounter the voices of indigenous peoples and outsider’s narratives. In addition to focusing on Yunnan and its regional history, this course will relate basic chronology and major events of Chinese history. The World of Yunnan examines religious pilgrimages, commercial linkages, and the Warlord politics of the early 20th century to better evaluate Yunnan’s unique positioning in China, Asia and the world. Each class will examine both textual and visual sources to provide a fine-grained understanding of Yunnan’s overlapping ethnic, commercial, and ecological landscapes. Students will be introduced to historical, anthropological, and religious studies methodologies culminating in a final oral project. Prerequisite: None. Fulfillment: CORE HPC/IPC; GCS Elective Chinese History, Society, and Culture.

GCHN-SHU 110 The Concept of China (4 Credits)
Typically offered Fall and Spring
What do people think they are talking about when they refer to “China”? Does the term refer to a geographical, cultural, political, hybrid, or other type of entity? How and why has that changed both within China and outside China? This course is about reality and representation; it will address both the shifting geographical, political, cultural and human reality of “China” and what “China” meant to both inhabitants and outsiders in different periods and in different contexts. The goals of the course are 1) to deepen understanding of the history of China and the role of the past in the present 2) to introduce different ways of thinking about China in the world and the world in China, 3) to learn to distinguish between opinion, hypothesis and fact in historical inquiry; 4) to restate a concept of China as dynamic, varied, and interactive. Prerequisite: None. Fulfillment: Core Curriculum Humanistic Perspectives on China or Interdisciplinary Perspectives on China; GCS Major Requirement; Humanities Major Other Introductory Courses (18-19 Critical Concepts Core Course/Survey Courses).

GCHN-SHU 112 China Stories: Traditions and Transformations (4 Credits)
Typically offered every year
What is a good China story? Is this the story China should tell about itself to the world? Is this about cultural self-perception, understanding the world, cross-cultural communication, or simple propaganda? More importantly, how can we tell China stories from perspectives inside and outside China? Narrative fiction is one of the most effective ways to engage with the Chinese past and the Chinese present. In this course, Students will be introduced to various genres including philosophy, religious allegory, romance, political satire, and science fiction. Instead of presenting China as a monolithic civilization, this course uses stories—from the premodern originals to their modern iterations in print and on screen—to understand “the world of China” and “China in the world” from ideological, ethnic, cultural, and geo-political perspectives. GCHN-SHU 116  Traditional Chinese Literature from the Beginning to 1911 (4 Credits)

Typically offered every year

Was Li Bai or Du Fu more famous during their time? Which one of the Four Classic Novels is more worth reading? More importantly, what is out there in the world of traditional Chinese literature? We will answer these questions in this introductory level course of traditional Chinese literature. This course surveys the historical developments of traditional Chinese literature from Early China to 1911 CE, focusing on the most representative literary figures, works, and genres. Along with these representative works, the course will also examine the most influential literary and aesthetic theories of each time period. Built on the survey, this course further aims to cultivate two sets of skills: 1. Literary analysis, especially through dissecting a work’s genre, imageries, aesthetics, and social contexts; 2. critiques on several conceptual issues based on both primary sources and modern scholarship, including the construction of a literary lineage, sense of a canon, standards of aesthetics, etc. This course does not require any Chinese, Mandarin or Classical Chinese.

Prerequisite: None. Fulfillment: 1. CORE HPC/IPC 2. GCS Elective: Chinese Media, Art, and Literature; Chinese Language and Literature Minor.

GCHN-SHU 128  The Buddha, His Teachings, and His Followers (4 Credits)

Typically offered every year

The course is designed to introduce important aspects of Buddhist thought and culture and encourage students to reflect their influence on Chinese (and also East Asian) culture and society. The first part of the course covers the early history of Buddhism and its evolution. It also introduces the so-called Mahāyāna (“Great Vehicle”) movement during the 1st century BCE and especially how the movement influenced Buddhist practices in East Asia. The second part of the course shifts to important topics in Chinese Buddhism such as magic, material culture, and environment. It also encourages students to relate Buddhist ideas to topics debated in contemporary society. Prerequisite: None. Fulfillment: GCS Major/Minor; GCS Elective: Chinese History, Society, and Culture.

GCHN-SHU 133  Visualizing Global China (4 Credits)

Typically offered every year

Amidst China’s burgeoning global economic presence, understanding its motivations and deciphering its overseas activities is vital. The Belt and Road Initiative and other expansive infrastructure endeavors underscore China’s ambitions. However, the opacity of the Chinese government’s plans poses a challenge for comprehensive research. This course introduces geovisualization as a lens to illuminate the spatial dynamics of China’s global ventures. Using the extensive “Mapping Global China” database and geovisualization tools, students will investigate China’s overseas investments’ spatial patterns. This hands-on exploration will unravel the multifaceted impacts across various geographies. By course completion, students will adeptly harness spatial analysis to discern the nuances of China’s worldwide economic endeavors and their broader implications. Prerequisite: None. GCHN-SHU 134  Politics and Aesthetics of New Chinese Documentary: Globalization and Social Transformations (4 Credits)

The new Chinese documentary emerged in the 1990s. Prior to that, documentary film in China was exclusively produced and distributed within a state-controlled media system. Paralleling and bearing witness to more than two decades of rapid and large-scale economic and social transformations in China, the new documentary has also transformed itself into a broad DV trend involving an increasingly large number of filmmakers, activists, critics and publics. The course traces a historical trajectory of the movement and pursues discussions on the dynamic relationships between aesthetic experimentations, socio-political exigencies and ethical responsibilities in documentary-making. Screenings address issues of migration, social justice, the environment, and LGBTQ movement, etc. Several filmmakers will visit and discuss their works with the students. There will likely be a couple of field trips to alternative exhibition spaces of independent cinema.

GCHN-SHU 156 History of Chinese Art (4 Credits)
Typically offered every year
This course surveys art, visual culture, and material culture in China from the Neolithic to the end of the 19th century. Approximately one-third of the lectures will be organized based on the different mediums used in art, such as ceramics, jades, bronzes, and sculptures. Some lectures are designed to contextualize art into separate functions, such as for funerary and Buddhist rituals. The rest classes stress the difference in patronage, such as imperial art and literati art. Particular attention will be paid to understanding objects within their original social and cultural contexts. We will also relate individual artworks to a broad cultural background, highlighting the influence of various religions, philosophies, and politics. The goal of this course is to familiarize students with the diverse body of artwork produced in premodern China, as well as to consider the role art has played in representing or negotiating identities, religions, history, and politics. Students will be trained in various art historical methodologies and will deepen their knowledge about one aspect of Chinese art history through a group curatorial project.

GCHN-SHU 164 The History of the Silk Road (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
The Silk Road has been a museum exhibition sensation as well as inspiration for Indiana-Jones-type of adventures, ever since the name was coined in 1877. As appealing as the name is in all kinds of media, it is never quite clear what the Silk Road actually entails. What does it mean to you, for instance? Searching for an answer, you will encounter numerous websites, books, scholarly and popular articles, or TV documentations that seek to unravel its many mysteries and even travel agencies that aim at revealing its myths. By consulting archaeological as well as written sources, this course is going to evaluate all aspects of early Silk Road history – trade, travel, war, religion, ideologies, and cultural exchange – from its earliest age through the Mongolian Era (13th century). The main goal is, however, not to look at every aspect in isolation as it is often done, but to bring them all together. This way it will become clear that actual reality was considerably more complex than is generally claimed. Only the interplay of several factors allowed The Silk Road to become a pre-modern 'success story' probably only rivaled by the internet.

GCHN-SHU 165  China and the Islamic World, c.600AD-Present  (4 Credits)
One of the most significant geopolitical shifts of recent years has been China's increased interest and involvement in the Islamic world, from Afghanistan to Africa. However, although such connections are not new, scholars have rarely examined the long history of contacts between the Sinic and the Islamic worlds comprehensively and systematically. Assembling a wide array of primary and secondary sources on different forms of Sino-Islamic encounters, this course introduces the major events, issues, and peoples that are involved in the complex relations between them. In-depth discussions of these topics will not only provide students with new perspectives on the histories of the Islamic world and China respectively, but also historical insights to gain a deeper understanding of the newly revived Sino-Islamic relations and the emerging China-US-Middle East triangular relationship in the twenty-first century. This course welcomes all students interested in histories of the Islamic world and China. No special background is required, though of course some knowledge of the history of China and/or the Islamic world will be a plus. Although it is a seminar course (we meet once weekly), a fifteen-minute mini-lecture in each class will provide students with basic background knowledge and set the context for the following week. We will then devote ourselves to discussion of the assigned readings. Pre-requisites: None. Fulfillment: CORE HPC/IPC; GCS China and the World/Electives Chinese History, Society, and Culture; Humanities Major Other Introductory Courses (18-19 Topic Courses/ Survey Courses).

GCHN-SHU 177  Good Death: China and Comparative Perspectives  (4 Credits)
Typically offered Fall and Spring
What makes a "good death"? How do people imagine, interpret, and describe the processes of dying? How do individuals respond to, live through, and move beyond the death of others? How do beliefs, customs, material cultures, and social structures co-constitute the lived realities of death? Drawing on insights from medical anthropology, anthropology of religion, and anthropology of ethics, this course explores diverse perspectives on the "good death". With a primary ethnographic focus on China, using an interdisciplinary and comparative approach, we will investigate: 1) the sociocultural constructions of death, 2) the processes of aging and dying, 3) the practices of end-of-life care, 4) debates about voluntary death, 5) how the living deal with the deceased, and 6) how people live with irrevocable losses. GCHN-SHU 182  Crimes, Detectives, and Justice in Chinese Culture  (4 Credits)
Typically offered every year
Crime stories have enjoyed long-lasting global popularity. How do these stories help us understand the shifting meanings of criminality, law, punishment, and justice across different times and spaces? What are the Chinese notions of crime and justice? How can these notions and ideas tell us about Chinese history and culture? This course explores the concepts and practices of criminal investigation and punishment throughout Chinese history. It guides students to examine a broad range of primary sources across textual and visual genres chronologically, from late-imperial courtroom drama, detective fiction of the Republican period, spy comic of the Socialist time to contemporary legal films and crime thrillers. By adopting an interdisciplinary and comparative approach, students will also engage with studies on criminality, morality, law, justice, scientific investigation, and state control from historical, sociological, and philosophical perspectives in and beyond China. Throughout the course, students will understand how the concepts, practices, and representations of crime and justice change and move between different times and spaces. The course explores the shifting meanings of criminality, law, punishment, and justice through, and move beyond the death of others? GCHN-SHU 183 Love and War, Wisdom and Strife: Chinese Poetry in a Global Context (4 Credits)

Love and war, wine and song, exile and return, sex and sensuality, adventure and meditation, yearning, struggle, and the peace that may come with deep wisdom: China's vibrant poetic tradition embodies the human drama and lives on as one of the world's most profound explorations of what it is to live, love, struggle and seek insight--of the human condition itself. Furthermore, China's history is one of verse, as its poetic traditions give readers both insight into its civilizational story through the voices of its poets -- from soldiers and emperors to proud women and men, from everyday folk and exceptional historical figures to artists and scholars of the highest rank. In short, to come to a real understanding of China--and, especially the aesthetic pleasures of Chinese culture--one must spend time among its poets. This is as true of China in our global age as it is of China's deep history. English-language translations of China's poetry are attempts--profoundly beautiful in their own right--to translate something essential about Chinese identity while also striking universal chords. GCHN-SHU 185 China in Ten Soundtracks: The Sonic World of Modern Chinese Culture (4 Credits)

Typically offered every year

This course surveys the sonorous world of modern Chinese culture from late Qing to the contemporary period. With a focus on sound, we will investigate diverse cultural forms ranging from public speech, sound cinema, popular music, and digital media, and explore how these artworks, by engaging with sound discursively and expressively, mediate questions of gender, identity, and technology in modern China. Following a chronological order, each week we will examine one prominent expression or theme of sound in a given decade and situate these sonic texts within local, national, and global histories. In so doing, we will learn to appreciate the vibrant creative impulses of modern Chinese cultural history and understand major cultural trends, artists, and sociotechnological developments. GCHN-SHU 200 Topics in Global China Studies (4 Credits)

Typically offered occasionally

#Authenticity and Shanzhais(#)# This course uses “fake markets” and “counterfeit” goods in Shanghai as a starting point for studying the concepts of originality and authenticity. Students in the course will learn about and challenge the western concepts of forgery, counterfeiting, and even history by analyzing Chinese alternatives such as shanzhai (##). We will examine the tension between several dominant ways of thinking about history and culture, and how these ways of thinking inform and are informed by political and economic trends. GCHN-SHU 205 Hong Kong Cinema (4 Credits)

This course introduces students to the distinctive cinema of Hong Kong (HK). We will focus on the years between 1967 and 1997, when HK rose from regional to international prominence, then declined. We will approach HK cinema from four perspectives: geopolitical history, film genre, directorial style, and the economics of the film industry. Students will learn to see these perspectives not as mutually exclusive but as complementary, for we can best understand a film by thinking about it from multiple angles. Students will write two essays, the first analyzing a film made before 1980, and the second analyzing one made between 1980 and 2000. Each student will twice lead discussion of readings from the syllabus. In a small group project, students will do research on a topic relevant to the course, make a bibliography of their findings, and then present those findings to the class. Prerequisites: GPS Fulfillment: CORE HPC or IPC; GCS Chinese Media, Arts, and Literature; Humanities Advanced course.

GCHN-SHU 206 Woman in Modern China Through Literature and Media (4 Credits)
Typically offered every year
This seminar provides a chronological survey of women's narratives in modern Chinese literature and culture from the late Qing to the twenty-first century. In this course, we will cover a wide range of genres that narrate women and their gendered experiences, including literature, visual culture, cinema, and digital media, and explore how womanhood is imagined, articulated, and contested in modern Chinese literature and culture. Moreover, we will attend to literary and cultural texts by female artists, and explore how female artists express their creative agency and mediate disparate gendered experiences. These critical and creative engagements with the woman question serves as a pivotal momentum in the development of literary and cultural modernity in China, and they also reflect the broader socio-political landscape and cultural ecology of modern China. GCHN-SHU 207 20th-century Chinese Writers in Global Context (4 Credits)
Typically offered Spring
The literary scene in the 20th century Chinese-speaking world is diverse in sound and script, vast in the scope of subject matters, and challenging for those migrant or exilic minds whose creative energy is driven by their critical insight to the world around them. Working in, outside, and between places like mainland China, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Malaysia, America, and France, Chinese-language writers may have in mind an imagined community of fellow countrymen when they write. Oftentimes, however, they may also ask provocative questions about nationalism, linguistic loyalty, and authenticity as Anglophone, Francophone, or bilingual writers living in the West. From and across multiple cultural margins, they speak to probe the nature of modernity, cultural contact, and otherness amid the global flows of labor and ideas. How do Lu Xun, Lao She, Ha Jin, Alai, and Gao Xingjian represent China on the world stage and find their place in this picture? Where in their works can we find stylistic and cultural hybridization? How do novels and stories by Zhang Ailing, Bai Xianyong, Maxine Hong Kingston, Gish Jen, and Shirley Lim cement or deconstruct the conventional ground on which we compare Eastern and Western civilizations? What kind of an alternative literary geography, and worldview, do these writers offer? Prerequisite: None. GCHN-SHU 211 Chinese Architecture (4 Credits)
Typically offered Fall and Spring
Chinese architecture is a product of a unique culture and geographic environment. It differed markedly from that of the world outside East Asia before the twentieth century. This course explores a diverse range of architecture in China from ancient to contemporary times. We will investigate how cities, palaces, temples, residences, and gardens are designed and constructed, and look into how form and space reflected Chinese social and ethical values. This course does not progress in a chronological sequence of dynasties. Instead, it is delivered in a series of themes that are related to essential aspects of Chinese history and culture. Special attention will be given to controversies between the tradition and modernity in China, and the global impact that Chinese architecture have had since a long time ago. Students will develop a deepened understanding of one aspect of Chinese architectural history through in-depth research or creative project on a well-conceived topic. Previous coursework in Chinese history, literature, or art is required. Please consult with the instructor regarding a special arrangement to fulfill the language requirement. Pre-req: At least one prior course in GCHN-SHU, HIST-SHU, HUMAN-SHU or LIT-SHU or ECON-SHU 238. GCHN-SHU 216 Psychology and Modernity in China (4 Credits)
Typically offered every year
In this course, we will see how people in China have used psychology to build a modern nation and promote modern values. Beginning in the early 20th century, we will encounter missionaries trying to replace superstition with science, reformers challenging gender relationships, and intellectuals who critiqued the Chinese character. As we move through the century, we will trace how various people have applied psychological techniques for very different purposes: creating healthy citizens for a new state, instilling a revolutionary spirit, managing corporate employees, and raising exemplary children. During the semester, each student will conduct textual and/or ethnographic research about an aspect of psychological expertise or mental health in contemporary China. GCHN-SHU 225 Cultural (Mis)translations: China and the West (4 Credits)
Typically offered every year
What happens when one major human civilization that originates from one end of the earth comes to meet with another that thrives on the other? Will they prove themselves capable of a fruitful engagement that leads to peace and friendship based on mutual respect and understanding rather than distrust or even mutual destruction? What is the role of language in this cross-cultural encounter? This course aims to explore one such encounter, a truly unusual case in terms of its scale and splendor, namely that between China and the West in the modern period broadly defined. Surely we will not ignore the problems—political, ideological, as well as technical—that arise in this interactive process, but our focus will be on the sunny side of that encounter, on the example of those who embrace and embody through their creative and intellectual work the ideal of a harmonious though culturally diverse world. GCHN-SHU 226 Queer China (4 Credits)
This course examines queer histories, cultures, and politics in China, focusing on contemporary China. It seeks to answer: In what contexts have queer China studies emerged as a field of studies, and how have they influenced queer studies rooted in Western experiences? What does it mean to be queer or non-normative in pre-modern, modern, and contemporary China, respectively? How have Chinese sexual discourses changed over time? How has sexuality been entangled with language, family, law, health, colonialism, and globalization in China? How can we envision a future of queer China in the global context? Drawing on literary, historical, and ethnographic works, as well as first-hand materials, this course invites students from across disciplines to explore the mutability and variety of queerness in China. GCHN-SHU 230 Culture and Media in Urban China (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
In this course we look at contemporary urban Chinese life from an interdisciplinary perspective, with readings in history, anthropology, sociology, cultural and literary studies. Readings provide a background for students' hands-on research, including ethnographic fieldwork, discourse analysis, and the study of contemporary formations of culture and media, including journalism, online communities, television, fashion, popular culture, and avant-garde art and music. Students develop a comprehensive familiarity with contemporary China studies and develop facility in major research methods in the humanities and social sciences. Students complete group research projects which include ethnographic, archival, statistical, and textual research. Pre-requisites: None. GCHN-SHU 231  Social and Cultural Debates in 20th Century China (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
“Our present trouble lies in our clinging to old institutions without knowing how to change,” Kang Youwei wrote in a letter to the Emperor in 1898. Kang’s concern would dominate intellectual debates over the twentieth century. In this course we will explore social and cultural debates in 20th-century China, focusing on topics such as Confucianism, social reform, nationalism, women empowerment, and art and literature. The questions that will guide this course include: Why did scholars like Kang Youwei and Liang Qiyao advocate reform and constitutional monarchy, while others, like Sun Yat-sen and Qiu Jin, called for revolution and the overthrow of the empire? What led to the Chinese Civil War between the Nationalists and the Communists? What was the May Fourth Movement about? Who are Mr. Science and Mr. Democracy? What made Hu Shi and Chen Duxiu mean when they declared classical language ‘dead’? What are Lu Xun’s Diary of a Madman and Ding Ling’s Miss Sophia’s Diary really about? What did Mao Zedong mean when he claimed at the Yan’an Forum, in 1942: “There is in fact no such thing as art for art’s sake [...] literature and art are the cogs and wheels in the whole revolutionary machine”? What is meant by the Cultural Fever of 1980s China? What made the ‘hooligan’ (###) author Wang Shuo a national bestseller in the 1980s? What were the main points of debate between the New Left and the neo-Liberals in the 1990s? Prerequisites: None. Fulfillment: GCS Chinese History, Society, and Culture.

GCHN-SHU 232  From Qing to the Republic: Social Debates in China (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
“Our present trouble lies in our clinging to old institutions without knowing how to change,” Kang Youwei wrote in a letter to the Emperor in 1898. Kang’s concern would dominate intellectual debates over the twentieth century. In this course we will explore social, cultural, and political debates during the transition period from the late Qing to the Republican period. We will focus on topics such as Confucianism, social and institutional reform, and nationalism. The questions that will guide this course include: Why did scholars like Kang Youwei and Liang Qiyao advocate reform and constitutional monarchy, while others, like Sun Yat-sen and Qiu Jin, called for revolution and the overthrow of the empire? What led to the Chinese Civil War between the Nationalists and the Communists? What was the May Fourth Movement about? And who are Mr. Science and Mr. Democracy? In addition to the debates themselves, the course will also cover debating techniques and students will have to participate in weekly class debates. GCHN-SHU 234  Dunhuang and Its Global Connections (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
Dunhuang is not only the “Pompeii of China” that in modern days attracts a huge amount of tourists; it was also one of the most metropolitan cities in the ancient world, comparable with Rome, Alexandria, or Constantinople. How could an inland city be so cosmopolitan? What makes the place a city of art? And how did this once fashionable city fade away, and then reappear as a complex of archeological sites? In this class, we will focus on one of the biggest archeological discoveries in the 20th century: Dunhuang. In addition to how Dunhuang was discovered, we will explore the main elements that vitalized Dunhuang as a metropolitan city: art, religion, language, literature, and technology. We will further examine the lifelines that brought these diverse cultural elements into Dunhuang from China, India, Central Asia, etc. As part of the class, we will also take a field trip to Dunhuang and nearby sites to physically experience the connectedness of Dunhuang. We will closely examine the murals, caves, and the city layouts so that we can reconstruct what it was like to live in the ancient Dunhuang. In other words, you get to be in the art world of Dunhuang. Pre-requisite: None. Fulfillment: CORE HPC or IPC; GCS China and the World.

GCHN-SHU 236 Immersive Narrative of Chinese Monuments (4 Credits)
Typically offered every year
This course combines digital visualization technology with contemporary interpretations of the significance of Chinese monuments that identify and recall major events in Chinese history. Students will learn about the history, cultural significance, and scholarly knowledge of the monuments. Selected sites include timber-structure buildings, Daoist temples, and Buddhist art and architecture. Meanwhile, the course will cover immersive narrative knowledge, such as direct modeling for Chinese wooden carpentry structures, artifacts lighting, texturing, rendering, and virtual walk-through animation. Visualization and further utilizations will apply in the lectures and assignments to examine virtual environments’ authenticity and information management of the Chinese monuments. Students will create an immersive narrative using visualization tools to present a chosen monument site with its historical and cultural values in the final group project. Upon completing this course, students will have deepened their knowledge of the emerging field of the digital humanities through both a “digital” and a “humanistic” perspective and how digital humanities can be applied to visualize the history and culture of China. GCHN-SHU 243 China and the Environment (4 Credits)
Typically offered Fall and Spring
China is an environmental disaster. China will save the world. There are many ways to think about China and the environment, but few conclusive answers. Our challenge is to think in the midst of multiple crises unfolding quickly through a tangled web of relationships that constitute environmental problems or solutions. To better understand how the environment in China is imagined, valued, and transformed, we will explore traditional ideas, environmental history and governance, ethnicity, and the aesthetic politics of the urban and rural. We will explore local material changes in energy, food, and forests and their links with global systems. And we will conclude by considering again China’s role in the global environmental crisis. GCHN-SHU 246 Youth and Consumer Culture in China (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
How can a hamburger symbolize progress, an animated character provide comfort, and rock music define one’s identity? In this course we will study the role of consumer culture in the lives of Chinese youth, both today and in the past. By examining popular commodities including sneakers, coffee, backpacking, and celebrity idols, we will think about how young people use these things to find friendship and love, to seek success and happiness, and to define who they are. As we consider why people like particular commodities, we will learn about class, gender, ethnicity, and modernity in China. Reading about the history of commodities in China, we will consider what is new about consumer culture, and why people’s tastes change over time. Alongside studies of specific commodities, we will read key theoretical texts about shopping, advertising, media, identity, and fantasy: these texts will help us understand how commodities can be imbued with tremendous power to shape our desires and create our identities. During the semester, each student will conduct qualitative research about a commodity, including online research and offline interviews with people who buy and sell this commodity. At the end of the semester, we will gather your research together to produce a handbook of Chinese youth and consumer culture. Prerequisite: Sophomore standing. GCHN-SHU 248 Animals and Chinese Religion (4 Credits)
Typically offered every year
The history of Chinese religion cannot be complete without non-human animals ("animals" hereafter). By consulting sources of various genres, the course aims to reveal how major religious traditions in pre-modern China—Confucian rituals, Daoism, Buddhism, and popular religion—utilized, imagined, and interacted with animals. The investigation also will expand to the contemporary debates over religious modernism and animal welfare/environmental ethics. The main goal of the course is to reveal to students how religious traditions and values were created, transmitted, and modified in different historical contexts. Besides, the course will provide a lens for students to compare the role of animals in various religious traditions and understand how these traditions interact with each other. Prerequisite: Sophomore standing or above. Fulfillment: CORE HPC or IPC; GCS Elective Chinese History, Society, and Culture; Social Science Focus Environmental Studies 200 level.

GCHN-SHU 250 Geographies of China (4 Credits)
Typically offered every year
Our goal is to map China. But rather than making maps through calculations or grids, we will be mapping China conceptually and theoretically. This is to say that in studying China's regions, physical geography, political territories, cities, counties, and people, our goal is to develop skills for thinking about China spatially. With thousands of years of recorded history and a political system oriented to progress and national development, China is often imagined in terms of linear time. However, from ancient walled cities to the Mao-era work-unit system to the more recent migrations of rural labor, understanding how political, commercial, and social spaces are organized is essential for understanding China's past and present. GCHN-SHU 252 20th-Century East Asia-U.S. Relations (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
This is a lecture course focusing on the changing relationship between East Asian countries and the United States in the 20th-century. On the basis of reviewing the early encounters between East Asia and America in the 18th and 19th centuries, this course covers the major political, economic, military, and cultural developments, as well as the dynamics underlying them, that have shaped the confrontation and cooperation between various East Asian countries and the United States in the past 100 years. In particular, this course aims to help students develop a better understanding of how nations with different values, cultural-historical backgrounds, political institutions, and levels of economic development may coexist in today's world. GCHN-SHU 255  Eat, Pray, Ponder: Chinese Intellectual Culture through the Ages  (4 Credits)
This is a class about what Chinese people think and believe, and how they perceive the society to which they belong. The class will cover a wide range of material from Shang oracle bones, Confucianism, Legalism, Taoism, Buddhism, and various folk religions, to 20th-century debates on Western thought and Communism. This class highlights three general concerns: 1) although we will cover the main categories of Chinese thought (e.g. Confucianism, Taoism and Buddhism), we will emphasize the diversity of thought both within and outside those larger categories; 2) we will make clear that people’s beliefs and thought changed frequently over time and space, and 3) we will examine how socio-economic conditions and the media used to convey ideas affect people’s intellectual world and vice versa. No Chinese is required. Pre-requisite: None. GCHN-SHU 263  Voices from the Margin: Modern Chinese and Sinophone Writers  (4 Credits)
Typically offered Spring
The literary scene in the modern and contemporary Chinese-speaking world is diverse, vast, and challenging for the migrant and exilic minds whose creative energies are often driven by their poignant insights to the turbulent events around them. Working in, outside, and between places like mainland China, Taiwan, Hong Kong, America, and parts of Southeast Asia, Chinese-language writers ask questions about nationalism, tradition, ethno-linguistic politics, and cultural authenticity. They speak from and across multiple cultural margins to probe the nature of modernity, cross-cultural contact, and otherness amid the global flows of labor and ideas. This course invites students to participate in the ongoing discursive and historiographical debates over the study of “modern Chinese literature” through a fast-emerging transnational and comparative perspective. Reading stories, novels, and essays by both established and marginalized writers, we place the traditional nation-based rubric of Chinese literary studies in critical dialogues with a set of jarring historical contexts: Euro-American imperialism, Chinese emigration and their settler-colonial history, the post-1949 political split, and global decolonization movements, among others. We ask: how do writers represent China on the world stage? Where in their works can we discern stylistic and cultural hybridization? How do they variously cement or deconstruct the conventional East-West divide? What alternative literary geographies and worldviews do they offer? We begin with the satirical modernists of Republican-era China. Next, we turn to Hong Kong and Taiwan for identity debates, colonial legacies, nativism, and postmodern cultures. In light of the global migration history, we also study narratives from Chinese-speaking America, Malaysia, and Singapore to analyze how writers creatively deconstruct the notion of Chineseness. Finally, we discuss the changing terms of exclusion and inclusion of ethnic minorities in present-day Han-Chinese societies, to further expose the internal fractures within the global Sinophone cultures. (This may be used as a topic course or literary interpretation in the Humanities.) Pre-requisite: None. Fulfillment: CORE HPC; GCS China and the World or Chinese Media, Arts, and Literature; Humanities Introductory course; Chinese Language and Literature Minor.

GCHN-SHU 265 Women in China: From May 4th to Me Too & Beyond (4 Credits)
Typically offered every year
This course focuses on the lives of women in China over the past century. Through a range of sources students will examine the advances made, and challenges encountered, by women in China. Students will analyze the impact, and often unforeseen consequences, of state policies, economic and social policies, on women's lives. In addition to documenting the many major improvements in the quality of most women's lives, the course will also address the challenges that women continue to face, such as the ongoing influence of traditional sexist values, trafficking of women, high-suicide rates, domestic-violence, and work-place gender discrimination and harassment. The course will conclude with an examination of different imaginings of the long-term impact of China's critical demographic gender imbalance. As much as possible the experiences of women from a range of backgrounds, including different socio-economic, regional, ethnic, and religious backgrounds, will be incorporated into the course. Sources will include government policies, memoirs, short stories and science fiction, films, and academic books and articles. Prerequisite: None. GCHN-SHU 277 Medicine in China (4 Credits)
Typically offered Spring
How did people in ancient and modern China understand health and treat illness? Historically and now, has "Chinese medicine" been an insular or open system? What can health perceptions and healing practices tell us about historical changes in China and its changing relationship with the world? Drawing on insights from the history of medicine and medical anthropology, this course explores health and healing in China through five chronologically organized units and one diachronically comparative unit. We will consider the cosmological, philosophical, and sociological factors that shape different visions of health. We will examine how local and global political processes affect healing practices and their perceived legitimacy and investigate what illness and remedy-seeking experiences reveal about the wider contexts in which medical activities take place. GCHN-SHU 316  Chinese Art and Architecture in Cross-cultural Contexts  (4 Credits)
Typically offered every year
This course is a research seminar that prepares the students for researching, translating, and critical writing in Chinese art and architecture in a cross-cultural context. The first half of the semester will progress with different topics, including, but not limited to, landscape paintings, Buddhist art, ceramics, and gardens and architecture. To tackle research questions and problems in these fields, the students will get familiar with Chinese collections of major international museums and online Chinese art and architecture databases. They have to discuss and debate over terms from Chinese primary sources translated into English. They will also present their critiques on scholarly works focusing on cross-cultural approaches and methodology. The second half of the course allows students to make progress on a research project. They may choose a specific cross-cultural issue in Chinese art/architecture or opt to critique a historian's work from a cross-cultural perspective. Upon completing the course, the students will expand their knowledge in Chinese art and architecture from a global perspective and enhance research and critique skills to serve more humanistic disciplines.

GCHN-SHU 318  Sex and Power in China, 1500–1950  (4 Credits)
Typically offered every year
This course explores the history of China (ca. 1500–1950) through the lens of gender and sexuality. By examining topics such as Confucianism, commercial sex, and women's religious activities and literary achievement, it makes a case for gender and sexuality as drivers of historical change. It considers not only women and women's history, but also men and masculinity, gender-nonconforming communities, and the changing relationship between gender, sexuality and social, economic, and cultural power. Students will be introduced to key questions in the study of Chinese cultural history and the history of gender and sexuality through a range of primary and secondary sources as well as film and multimedia. Our discussion will also be informed by cross-cultural comparisons with cases from other East Asian societies.
