<td>HIST-GA 1139</td>
<td>Materials, Matter, and Materiality in the Middle Ages</td>
<td>(4 Credits)</td>
<td>Typically offered occasionally. The theme of the colloquium, materiality, is concerned with the tangible stuff of medieval lives, with those materials -animal parts, vegetable fibers, metal, stones, clay, wood, that were used and processed into finished objects -comestibles, clothing, homes and monuments, artifacts and ornaments, images and the media of written and visual communication. As they emerged from raw materials, things affected social relations and cultural perception, enabling action and provoking reaction. We will consider, for example, the effects of pageantry, with its elaborate display of culinary, heraldic, and sartorial splendor, in asserting chivalric claims to dominance. We will examine recent archeological findings to understand the ways accessories to clothing enabled peasants to resist and re-fashion the identities imposed upon them by medieval elites.</td>

HIST-GA 1730 Global Encounters 1300-1800 (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
The general aim of this course is to study global interactions between various societies from 1300 to 1800, a period during which peoples from all continents encountered one another in conditions of both cooperation and collision. Topics include comparative notions of empire and colonial practices; the ideas and beliefs each society held about themselves and others? and the things and conventions that gave them such identities: language, color, ethnicity, kinship, religion, and so on. Throughout the course, students also study the structure of each society?s thought; the categories of analysis used in encounters with other societies; and how interactions and the language used to characterize others changed over time. Other topics include trade between various societies; the creation of colonial societies; slavery: evolution, concepts, and its influence in the creation of racial theories; diaspora in history and its influence in the various societies affected by migratory movements.
Grading: GSAS Graded
Repeatable for additional credit: No

HIST-GA 1750 Introduction to Public History (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
This course provides an introductory overview to the public history field in its diverse venues and manifestations. Through intensive reading, discussion, and writing, students consider how the field of public history came into being and how it has evolved; where and how history is made and consumed; and the intersections and collisions of academic history with commemoration and popular history-making.
Grading: GSAS Graded

HIST-GA 1805 The Haitian Revolution & The Atlantic World (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
This course focuses on one of the most important and radical revolutions of the modern world. We begin with classic and more recent perspectives on the revolution itself in an attempt to understand its origins, character, course, and legacies in Haiti from the period of 1789 through the immediate post-independence (1804) period. The second focus of the course is on the revolution’s repercussions and impact outside the borders of the French colony, throughout the Atlantic World. Third, we address the question of literary, cinematic, and academic representations of the revolution, its protagonists, and its legacies.
Grading: GSAS Graded
Repeatable for additional credit: No

HIST-GA 1809 Slavery, Colonialism & Revolution in The Caribb (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
Introduction to the major themes and debates of colonial Caribbean history. Begins with the reading of general works on the Caribbean: selections from major texts and classic essays by historians, anthropologists, and literary critics arguing the case for the study of the Caribbean as a unit of analysis. From there, goes on to consider the central themes of the region and the period: slavery, capitalism, and emancipation; colonialism, revolution, and imperialism; nationalism and race. Themes are studied from a variety of approaches and perspectives, from very local microhistorical studies to comparative ones to more sweeping global treatments. Throughout, an attempt is made to bridge the vertical lines that often separate the study of the different linguistic and imperial Caribbeans.
Grading: GSAS Graded

HIST-GA 1982 Italian Fascism (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
Fascism is back in the news today, with right-wing movements finding popularity in Europe and strongmen rulers finding favor. This interdisciplinary course gives us background to understand our contemporary world by examining Benito Mussolini’s dictatorship. We address Fascism’s culture of violence; biopolitics and demographic policy; imperialism and war; Fascist ideology and visual culture; gender roles; and anti-Fascism.

HIST-GA 1985 Italy in World War II (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
Italy from 1940 to 1945, with a focus on cultural and political responses to war and on how the war has been represented in memory. The course is thematic rather than chronological in nature; our sources include reportage, novels, archival documents, memoirs, and non-fiction and feature film as our sources. Ongoing themes will include the meanings of resistance and collaboration; the problematics of testimony, witnessing, and memory; the impact of war on gender roles and identities; and the representation of violence.

HIST-GA 2028  History of West Africa (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
This course is a meditation on West African social history, and spans periods from the earliest through the postcolonial. We will read a monograph a week, cutting-edge works that help to shape the field of African history as a whole, serving as portals into the historiographic and methodological issues that historians of Africa encounter. The idea is for students to acquire an understanding of how the literature has built upon itself, as well as the means (methods/approaches) by which histories of the continent have been researched and written. This is also the craft of the historian, and to best way to learn that craft is to consider how it unfolds over the course of an entire œuvre. The course is intended to support student research, which in practical terms, the course is the completion of a term/research paper by the end of the semester.

HIST-GA 2031  Advanced Archival Description (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
This course explores the purposes of archival description and the place of description in the continuum of archival practice, especially its relationship to arrangement, discovery, and reference. The course exposes students to the application of archival description and introduces the tools used to create description: content and encoding standards, controlled vocabularies, and content management systems. The course also emphasizes the importance of understanding users and applying this knowledge to influence descriptive practice, local practice and implementation, and online discovery environments. Introduction to Archives is a prerequisite for this course.

HIST-GA 2033  Creating Digital History (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
A hands-on introduction to “doing history” in the digital age, this course focuses on the evolving methodologies and tools used by public historians to collect, preserve, and present digital sources. Students will become familiar with a range of web-based tools, such as Omeka, and learn best practices for digitizing, adding metadata, tagging, and clearing permissions. By evaluating existing digital history projects and discussing perspectives from leading practitioners, students will also consider the role of the general public as both audiences for, and co-creators of, digital history. The core requirement is a collaborative digital history archive and exhibit that will be developed throughout the semester on a selected historical theme.

HIST-GA 2208 Religion at the American Univ: From Protestant Bastian to Secular Enterprise - A History (3 Credits)
In “Religion at the American University” we will seek to understand the—sometimes confusing—place of religion in the 21st century university through an historical lens. To understand the radically changed place of religion in the American college and university from the religious core of the colonial and early national university to today’s secular institution. To understand tensions from the past that are reflected in 21st century higher education such as the perceived tension between religion and science (think battles over evolution) or struggles over the teaching of values vs. a more value-free approach to data. To ask “where did the idea of a college chaplain or a religious life leader come from?” We know that in the clergy dominated colleges of the colonial era, the notion of a designated chaplain made no sense? When did this change? Why?

HIST-GA 2702 The Agrarian Question in History (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
This course explores the emergence of what is called the “Agrarian Question” as that question was related to the emergence of modernity (as a tendentially global economic, cultural, social, and political formation). The course begins with formative analyses of the problem of value (where and how is value produced?) and continues into the question of land, peasants, domestic and global revolution, modernization and development, race & labor, gender & reproduction, migration and ecological disaster/pandemics. The aim is to familiarize students with some basic theoretical/philosophical approaches and selected historical texts, as these articulate the agrarian question in modern terms. The course is intended to assist students in analyzing the agrarian question through a broad theoretical/historical/global perspective.

HIST-GA 3504 Jews and the History of American Diversity (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
This graduate research seminar seeks to place the experience of American Jews into the context of the nation's religious, ethnic, and racial diversity from the colonial period through the later part of the twentieth century. We will ask how the Jews' concentration in the commercial sector, their whiteness in the eyes of the state, and the legacy of European anti-Semitism structured the Jewish encounters with other Americans. The Civil War, the era of mass migration, and the vast expansion of American industry, and the conquest of the North American continent will be considered. The Holocaust indeed functions as a watershed event, but the Great Depression and the New Deal, post-war suburbanization, the civil rights movement, and the turmoil of the late 1960s also proved formative. We will look at political developments but also literary, artistic and intellectual manifestations of how Jews constructed these other Americans, and conversely how these many others made sense of the Jews in their midst.

HIST-GA 3702 Empire and Law in History (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
This course introduces graduate students to the comparative study of law in empire. Readings and discussions address such topics as the definition of imperial sovereignty, conflicts over jurisdiction and rights, the role of legal discourse in imperial politics, and the relation between imperial law and international law. We will also explore various methodologies for the study of empire and law, including discussion of the use of case records and other legal documents and writings to analyze imperial history. The chronological and geographic sweep of the course is intended to encourage comparative analysis of law in empire, with most attention paid to the European colonial world between 1500 and 1900.

HIST-GA 3826  Reconstructing Lives (4 Credits)
Typically offered occasionally
Understanding the history of the American Civil War brings its present-day legacies sharply into focus. With race and slavery at the center, this course explores the Civil War, Reconstruction, and their aftermath, proceeding from two premises: first, that race and slavery were central to the causes and consequences of the war; and second, that the war and its legacies remain central to modern U.S. history. Over the course of the semester, we will follow multiple threads and trajectories, illuminating the experiences of northerners and southerners; African Americans, whites, and Native Americans; soldiers and civilians; men and women; rich, middling, and poor. In tandem with reading an array of scholarship, we will also reflect critically upon the ways in which the Civil War has been remembered and represented in popular culture.
