HIST-UH 1105 Africa in the World (4 Credits)

Typically offered Fall

This course is a broad survey of African history. The course will explore the African past in its diversity. Students will explore the continent's political complexity and social creativity across a period of several millennia. The class will consider the impact of gender, religion, healing practices, trade, mobility, and the environment on major historical developments in Africa before the continent's colonization by European imperialistic powers, through the trans-Atlantic slave trade, and up to the contemporary period. The course will also introduce students to African history's methodology and to the use of linguistic, material, and oral sources in the writing of history.

HIST-UH 1106 China in the World (4 Credits)

Typically offered Spring

China's rise to global prominence may seem to be a recent event, but it is in fact the product of a longer history of globalization, of which "China," in various guises, has always been a defining part. This course introduces and examines those features of history in China that help explain China's evolving place in the world, including: the geography of empire, military organization, population growth, cultural production, urbanization, technological innovation, gender dynamics, migration and diaspora formation, foreign relations, and, of course, economic development. Along the way, the course addresses key debates about China's origins, cartographic contours, and cultural imaginaries, as well as the performative aspects of ethnonyms and toponyms like "China" and "Zhongguo"

HIST-UH 1110 Colonial Latin America and the Atlantic World (4 Credits)

Typically offered Spring term of even numbered years

This course introduces students to the colonial origins of Latin America and examines colonialism's lasting impact on the region. It follows the unfolding and demise of a new social order under European rule over a period spanning from the 16th-century conquest through the early 19th-century wars of independence, highlighting international and global connections that shaped this region's social, cultural, and political history. Specific topics covered include Pre-Columbian worlds, Native-European confrontations and negotiations, the Catholic Church and popular religiosity, patriarchy and honor codes, racial dynamics and slavery, the development of capitalism, anti-colonial struggles, imperial rivalry, reform and decline, and colonial legacies.

HIST-UH 1119 Russia and the World (4 Credits)

Typically offered Fall of even numbered years

The course surveys the relationship between modern Russia and the rest of the world from 1917 to the present. It will begin with the Bolsheviks and their dream of worldwide socialist revolution as situated in its international context, the creation and expansion of the Soviet socialist state, the onset and development of Stalin's personal despotism, the experiences and consequences of World War II, and the various postwar reforms. Special attention will be paid to the dynamics of the new socialist society, the connections between Soviet domestic and foreign policies, the economics of the cold war, Soviet orientalism, the 1991 collapse, and the legacies of Soviet empire under Putin.

HIST-UH 1125X South Asia in the Indian Ocean World (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring term of odd numbered years*

This course offers an opportunity for in-depth study of the history and culture of the South Asians who comprise the majority population of the United Arab Emirates. Situated at the center of the Indian Ocean world, the Indian subcontinent is currently home to over a billion people, and is the site of richly interconnected histories with regions around the wider Indian Ocean, including the Gulf. The course explores these histories, with a focus on understanding major cultural, political, economic, and environmental connections and changes as they affected ordinary people (including migrant laborers) and shaped the nature of collective identities (ethnic, national, religious, caste, class, gender, regional, and linguistic) over time. In developing an understanding of how collective identities were produced historically, students ultimately acquire valuable tools for appraising and navigating competing models of nationalism, cosmopolitanism, and universalism in the wider Indian Ocean world today.

HIST-UH 1126X Digital History (4 Credits)

This course introduces students to the theoretical and practical impacts of digital technologies on historical scholarship with a focus on Middle Eastern history. We will examine how algorithmic tools and an abundance of digital sources affect historical research, especially for digitally under-resourced languages/histories. The course will strike a balance between exploring the scope of digital history and conducting research digitally. Students will engage in researching, crowdsourcing, and presenting a topic using digital tools while considering the ethical and professional challenges that may arise. The course will also integrate some of the key concepts and practices of public history, highlighting how digital methodologies can enhance public engagement and historical interpretation.

HIST-UH 1131 Southeast Asia in the World (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring*

From the jungle palaces of Angkor Wat to the eight million person futuristic metropolis of Kuala Lumpur; from the fall of Saigon to President Obama slurping Pho in the street of Hanoi; from the Portuguese, Persian, and Arabic trading ships sailing the Strait of Malacca to Bangkok's Tom Yum Kung crisis, Southeast Asia has always been a vital nexus for the interaction of cultures from both within Southeast Asia and without. This course explores key themes in Southeast Asia's connections with world history: colonialism, maritime trade connections and cultural contacts, religious division, the diversity of political regimes, war and conflict, economic development, and international relationships with Great Powers. Paying special attention to the history of diversity within and across countries in this region clarifies how politics operates and produces different social and economic outcomes for different national and non-national communities. The first part of the course reviews long-term history trends. The second part turns to a series of thematic discussions on issues related to ASEAN nations' constructive engagement, conflict management, and international relations.

HIST-UH 2010 History and Globalization (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall and Spring*

History offers a unique perspective on the process of globalization, by virtue of its insistence that human experience be understood in its spatial and temporal contexts. Rigorous global history questions and even supplants common understandings of globalization as Westernization. But how does history do this, and can a global historical framework enhance all forms of historical, humanistic, and social scientific inquiry? Following an assessment of foundational modern Western frameworks for understanding world history, including those of Marx and Hegel, students examine how and why people around the world have variously embraced and rejected such foundational accounts. Readings address all world regions, including Asia, Africa, the Americas, Asia, Europe, the Middle East, and Oceania, and familiarize students with state-of-the-art knowledge about globalization. NOTE: This course maybe used in place of SOCSO-UH 1011 (GEPS) for Social Science Majors or Minors.

This course explores the artistic and intellectual avant-gardes, counter-cultures and protest movements of the 1960s and the early 1970s from a global perspective, assessing their impact on individual identities, social and gender hierarchies, domestic politics and international relations during the Cold War. It traces the history of the various protest movements and explores a plethora of national experiences with respect to domestic and transnational networks of dissent as well as global imaginaries. Taking into account the aesthetics and performativity of protest, the course examines the role of cultural practices, action repertoires, the media, visual representations, lifestyle and fashion, the politics of memory, and the impact of dissent on political decision-makers and society at large.

HIST-UH 2116 Empires and Museums: A History of Knowledge Production and Museum-making (4 Credits)Typically offered occasionally*

The course will explore the beginning of colonial museums in Europe, in particular the early museums established in Britain, France, Belgium and Netherlands in the 19th and the 20th centuries. Set against the backdrop of empire building, the course will discuss how museum spaces, collections, display and labeling of objects was planned to fit the colonial ideology of racial supremacy and territorial conquest on the one hand, and establish the "otherness" of the colonial subjects on the other. The museums were also meant to display the "splendors" of the colonies such as crafts, flora, fauna and minerals, produce knowledge about the acquired territories as well as disseminate this knowledge among museum visitors. Finally, the course will shift the focus to colonial museums of South Asia and analyze how museum-making has shaped the way in which we understand the history and heritage of these former colonies and how these museums are being restructured in the present day, post-colonial world.

HIST-UH 2117 History in the Headlines (2 Credits)Typically offered Fall*

The key events you read about in your morning twitter feed or on your favorite news sites are usually not unique in world affairs. They have a background, a context, that makes them more understandable and often more interesting. History is about everything that happened before you started reading this course description. And thinking historically means trying to make sense of the new in the context of what human beings have done before. In this lecture series, historians and scholars employing a historical perspective in their work will take you on a behind the scenes tour of current events you thought you knew, with the goal of making you a better observer and analyst of the world around you. This is a two-credit course designed to show students how thinking historically can help them understand better the key issues in the world around them. The weekly 90-minute meeting begins with a lecture by a specialist with the remaining portion of the session devoted to Q&A and discussion. Course can be repeated one-time for a maximum of four credits.

HIST-UH 2118 Global Asia Before Modernity (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall*

Global Asia defines Asia as a space of perpetual globalization and explores Asian societies, cultures, and political economies as they have been shaped by dynamic historical processes which expand human connectivity and transform territorial formations of power and authority. Pre-modern Global Asia embraced regions all around the old Silk Roads and Indian Ocean, from ancient times. In this course, we study the evolution of Asian worlds of mobility that Europeans sought to join in the fifteenth century and Asia's spatial subsequent expansion in worlds of empire up to the onset of industrial capitalism. This course thus provides students with a long-term view of History and a broadly transnational understanding of Asian History in the development of the modern world.

HIST-UH 2119 Global Asia in the Modern World (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall*

This course is about globalization as a very long-term historical process of spatially expansive mobility, communication, exchange, and territorial transformation, in which Asia is an open space of perpetual globalization, with no fixed boundaries, spanning Arctic and Tropics and lands from the Mediterranean to Pacific, all around the Indian Ocean, from Africa to Fiji. The standard view of Asia as being a static collection of fixed bounded territories, cut off from Europe, Middle East, Africa, and America, and propelled by Europeans into modernity, is dangerously archaic. In this course, we explore the ways in which Asia's long globalization launched and sustained the imperial production of the modern world economy and energized global capitalism in a world of nations. We see the rise of Global Asia today as a key to Asian history, with a long-term Asia-centric view of modern World History.

HIST-UH 2121 Genocide in a Global Perspective (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall*

Is genocide a useful category of analysis, or does it obscure as much as it reveals? Genocide is recognized as a crime under international law and codified in the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide. It is hailed as the crime of crimes and all states, regardless of their ratification status, are legally bound to prevent and prosecute genocide. Yet genocide not only continues to proliferate in international society, it has also proven a politically useful term of legitimation evidence by its invocation to justify wars, in issues of state sovereignty and territoriality and in questions of reparations to post-colonial states. This class poses and tries to answer the following: How and why did armed conflict and violence against civilians occur? How are war and genocide related? How, if at all, does localized violence relate to broader processes like state decomposition, formation, and consolidation? Or is racial hatred really the main factor? How were the categories of civilians, war crimes, crimes against humanity, and genocide constructed in the history of the law of armed conflict ("international humanitarian law")? How did contemporaries define and categorize violence excess?

HIST-UH 2122 Public History (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall*

This course explores Public History as the practice of presenting historical knowledge and research to a wider audience beyond academic settings in order to make history accessible, relevant, and meaningful to the general public and foster dialogue about the past. It explores the connections between the past and contemporary issues, demonstrating the relevance of historical understanding to current debates, challenges, and events. In doing so it encourages students to engage in a critical reflection on how the past shapes the present and informs the future. The course focuses on different contexts, themes, and media for public history engagement: oral history, cinema, radio, museums, archives, fiction, and memory.

HIST-UH 2123 Women in World History (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring*

What makes a woman? What would the history of the world look like through women's eyes? How might such a perspective prompt us to rethink concepts like "work," "politics," "economics," "family," "revolutions," "leadership," "activism," and "periodization" in history? This course will debate answers to these questions by exploring how gender systems, mediated by power relations of class, race, religion, nationality, and sexuality, shaped women's lived experiences in different times and places from 1500 to the present. We will seek the clues to these systems by studying a variety of sources created both by and about women from religion, politics, philosophy, law, science and medicine, and public and popular culture. We will study how ideas about gender traveled, adapted, and sometimes changed through case studies of cross-cultural encounters, empire-building, revolutions, social movements, and economic and technological transformations. And we will evaluate how the rich diversity of women's lives in our collective past, judged by their legal status, family lives, work, and public roles, accommodated or contested these gender norms and expectations. We will conclude with exchanges about the variety of contemporary visions and policy implications of gender justice

HIST-UH 3010 Writing History (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring*

How is history written? This course offers a survey of the major theories and practices that have defined history as a scholarly discipline, and as a way of writing, over the last fifty years. Students are introduced to the major theoretical and narrative perspectives that have shaped historiography: to the kinds of historical questions that drive the research agendas of contemporary historians; and to the kinds of historical literature historians write, including analytical, narrative, scholarly, popular, and experimental. How do historians find and interpret their sources? How do they engage with existing scholarship while still striving to push their discipline forward? What methods do they apply to communicate the results of their research to other scholars and to a wider public readership? Students will learn to evaluate a wide array of different historical sources (including written documents, material artifacts, oral histories, and visual culture). They will also gain experience in meeting the challenges of writing their own works of historical scholarship, producing an original piece of written history by the end of the semester.

HIST-UH 3110 Economic Development and Environmental Change in China (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall of even numbered years*

Can China strike a balance between economic development and environmental protection? This question, perhaps the most important question facing China (indeed the world) over the next few decades, pits economy and environment against one another. How did this adversarial relationship come about? Is it necessarily adversarial? Is it rooted in long-term trends in Chinese history, or in the most recent decades of double-digit economic growth? Are there solutions? Or are there better ways of asking the question? This course will look closely at the benefits, the consequences, and the costs of economic growth to society, ecology, and environment in China. The focus is on present dilemmas, examined through an historical perspective.

HIST-UH 3112 Asian Borderlands (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring term of even numbered years*

How do we study peoples, places, and societies that lie within "borderlands," spaces that either connect or separate larger powers? This course considers that questions through two examples of borderland regions that lie within and between southeast Asia and China. The first is a place that appears on no world map by which scholars now call "Zomia," the densely populated upland regions of mainland Southeast Asia and Southwest China. We will look at different ways studying this "non-place," test the heuristic limits of key analytical categories like nation, state, and citizenship, and explore alternative notions of political and cultural community. The second borderland region is the South China Sea, which others call the Champa Sea, or the Philippine Sea, or the North Natuna Sea. It is a place that few people inhabit, but which has been a crucial source of natural resources and mobility for states and peoples claiming ownership or rights to parts of it. Some fear it may be the flashpoint of a third world war, and how we understand its history may make the difference.

HIST-UH 3310 Humanitarianism in Africa: A Critical History (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring term of even numbered years*

What can the long history of humanitarian interventions in Africa teach us about global justice and our shared humanity? This course explores more than two centuries of interactions between the West and Africa through the prism of humanitarianism. Many humanitarian campaigns and movements analyzed in the course used a Manichean rhetoric of good versus evil. Yet, their motivations were often complex; and their effects, sometimes questionable. During the first part of the course, students formulate questions about the ethics of modern humanitarianism by exploring scholarly works by anthropologists, political scientists, and sociologists, as well as films and literary texts. Students then use these questions to review historical case-studies, from the abolition of the slave trade to the #Kony2012 campaign. The course invites students to critically reflect on the logic of "salvation" projects and to deconstruct problematic clichés about the African continent.

HIST-UH 3312 Arts and Politics in Modern Latin America (1780 to the present) (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall of odd numbered years*

The course explores the relationship between arts and politics in modern Latin America. It focuses on the role played by the arts in some of the region's main political processes, such as state formation, revolutions, and modernization. The course traces the intellectual and social repercussions of theater plays, music, literature, and the visual arts in Latin American societies. Specific themes include baroque and neoclassical poetics, nationalism, modernism, race and ethnicity, avant-gardes, memory, and truth.

HIST-UH 3315 Love in Africa (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall of odd numbered years*

This course focuses on love in Africa, from the late 19th Century to the present. By doing so, the course introduces students to a multiplicity of themes in African history, from the history of gender and sexuality to popular culture, generational conflicts, and the AIDS epidemics. Studying love is central to understanding how Africans have imagined and lived their lives as gendered individuals and members of their societies, often in the face of oppressive colonial regimes and strenuous living conditions. The course will view love in its various declensions: as an emotion and expression of intimacy (the notion of romantic love), as virtue (love in theological and political discourses), as a set practices at the chore of conjugality and sexuality, and as an object of debate in the public sphere. Students will learn how to historicize affects and their relationships to society, politics, and economy. We will read fiction and primary sources, watch movies, and discuss recent academic works that will help us understand change and continuities in how individuals and communities across Africa have defined, debated, and experienced love.

HIST-UH 3319 African American Freedom Struggle (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall of even numbered years*

This course explores the African American freedom struggle in the United States. It analyzes its historical origins, African American emancipation during the Civil War and reconstruction, migration patterns and economic conditions in the agricultural and industrial sectors, "Jim Crow" laws and the "Separate, but equal" doctrine, as well as the impact of US military engagements and the Cold War on race relations during the 20th century. The course examines the various challenges to legalized segregation in the aftermath of World War II, the powerful grassroots campaigns of African American civil rights activists and organizations during the 1960/70s and their political and cultural impact, and the emergence of black nationalism and black power. It also traces the ways in which the struggle for racial equality in the US was perceived as part of a larger struggle against colonialism around the world. Furthermore, the course incorporates discussions about affirmative action, the "prison-industrial complex", the notion of a "post-racial America" under the Obama administration into the broader context of an ongoing quest for equal rights and social justice in the US.

HIST-UH 3510X Muslim Societies in African History (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall of odd numbered years*

The objective of this course is to trace and understand the history of Islam as a religious tradition and Muslim societies in Africa as part of a larger world. This course surveys the history and historiography of Islam in Africa from its arrival in North Africa in the seventh century through the present day in postcolonial Africa while also paying attention to continuing points of contact and exchange between Muslims in Africa across the Sahara as well as the Atlantic and Indian Ocean worlds. Students will examine the history of Islam in Africa in light of issues such as conversion, interactions with other religious traditions, reform movements, slavery and race, education, gender, European colonial rule, and postcolonial politics. Possible sources for the course include Arab geographical and travel accounts, juridical texts debating social categories of race, slavery and gender, regional chronicles reflecting the interface between Islam and local African religious traditions, colonial reports revealing fears of Islam as a unifying force across empires, and audio recordings of religious sermons.

The Indian Ocean has provided an important avenue for the movement of people, traditions and ideas over centuries. The course explores the cultural exchange in the Indian Ocean world with the spread of Buddhism, Hinduism, Islam and later Christianity. How are the different regions of the Indian Ocean littorals tied together through networks of piety, pilgrimage and mythologies? Do the surviving material remains that dot the littorals - built structures, religious iconography, inscriptions, maps, travelogues, legends and poetry of traveling saints and mythologies about the Oceanic waters itself, attest this dynamic exchange and interconnectedness? How do the circulation of people, relics and mythologies connect the hinterland with people and places across the waters?

This course examines the interconnected histories, cultures, and societies of Central Asia and the Middle East. It will begin with an overview of the Mongol empire and its legacies in Central Asia and the broader Muslim world. The course will compare the emerging post-Mongol Eurasian and Ottoman states through the lenses of law, political legitimacy, succession, and ruling institutions. The course will then compare Russian and Ottoman civilizing missions, imperial nationalisms, treatments of sectarianism and ethnic minorities, constitutionalism, public health policies, responses to Islamic modernism, Marxist and other radical leftist ideas, and women's emancipation. The course will conclude by considering how post-imperial modernization projects transformed identity, gender, and religion in Central Asia and the Middle East.

This course approaches the Mediterranean as a multicultural site that lends itself to questions concerning cultural encounters and crossovers, as well as to the issue of historical memory. The Mediterranean emerges in our investigation as the substance of, and the backdrop for, a reevaluation of the various narratives of modernity; for an examination of the centrality of colonialism in that modernization process; and finally, for an encounter with the realities of contemporary immigration. The course brings in methodologies and material from different approaches to the topic, from historical sociology, to philosophy of history, and cultural theory. Key concepts will be defined rigorously: world system, world economy, subaltern, hegemony, archive and translation.

This course considers the emergence, diffusion, and resonance of classical Greek thought and habits. Exploring the variety of Hellenisms expressed over time, the course explores the contributions of Sophocles, Plato, and Aristotle alongside those of Al-Ghazali, El Greco, and Nietzsche. It traces the varied spaces Hellenism has occupied and reflects upon the various ways the Hellenic legacy has been interpreted and renegotiated through films, novels, operas, "heritage flings," and genocides. Decoupling Hellenism from Greekness, it promotes a more expansive approach; one that considers Arabic, Ottoman, and Jewish Hellenisms, and is more inclusive of non-Christian, female, queer, and cosmopolitan voices.

HIST-UH 3717 Art and Politics in Europe from the French Revolution to the end of the Second World War (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall*

This course examines the relationship between art and politics in Europe from the French Revolution to 1945, focusing on public monumentality and politics, allowing students to study the political history of European regimes through this lens. It focuses on how art was conceived by contemporaries, in different and evolving modalities, as essential to the construction or perpetuation of a state or political system, and not merely as a "covering" for politics. This course will focus on two major "moments" in the relationship between art (as architecture and public monumentality) and politics. The first is that of Revolution and artistic production - and destruction. Did the French revolution have a specific vision of art compared to the monarchical regime that preceded it? What was expected from artistic production in terms of politicization? Why did the Revolution destroy a large part of the Ancien Régime artistic production (and especially churches)? What is iconoclasm? The second moment focuses on the construction of nation-states and art, mainly in 19th-century Germany and Italy.

HIST-UH 4000 Capstone Seminar (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall*

The History Capstone Seminar guides students through the capstone writing process. The course helps students identify the challenges of conducting long-term historical research and writing and develop strategies for meeting those challenges. Course assignments help students complete the project in stages, in collaboration with each student's capstone advisor, and clarify the specific expectations for submitting a polished work of historical scholarship for review. The course combines writing workshops and individualized review sessions with structured time for research and writing.

Grading: Ugrd Abu Dhabi GradedRepeatable for additional credit: NoPrerequisites: HIST-UH 2010 (or HIST-UH 3010 for students writing a capstone project in History) and senior standing.

HIST-UH 4001 Capstone Project (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring*

The capstone experience provides seniors with the opportunity to work closely with a faculty mentor and to conduct extensive research on a topic of their choice. The program consists of a capstone seminar, taken in the first semester of the senior year, and a year-long individualized thesis tutorial. During the capstone seminar, students define a thesis topic of their choice, develop a bibliography, read broadly in background works, and begin their research. In the tutorial, students work on a one-to-one basis with a faculty director to hone their research and produce successive drafts of a senior thesis. The capstone experience culminates in the public presentation of the senior thesis. Students may also elect to participate in a College Capstone Project with students majoring in other disciplines in the arts, and the natural and social sciences. Collaborating students work with a faculty member to define the overall goals of the Capstone Project, as well as the particular goals of each participant.
