NYSED: 78491 HEGIS: 1499 CIP: 22.9999

Program Description

In this LLM specialization (<https://www.law.nyu.edu/llmjsd/ciil/>), you will examine the relationships between global and domestic competition, intellectual property, and information laws to understand the dynamic forces at play in the modern economy.

You will decide to focus in one of two areas: antitrust and competition policy, or intellectual property and information law. You'll have access to foundational classes and an array of advanced seminars and other courses in both areas. In many of our courses, you will find professors who balance theoretical discussions with examples of the implementation of evolving regulations and policy in the US and abroad.

Learning Outcomes

In accordance with Revised ABA Standard 302; N.Y. Court of Appeals Rule 520.18(a)(1) please find an inventory of student learning outcomes that covers the areas of "substantive knowledge and procedural law"; lawyering skills; and "proper professional and ethical responsibilities to clients and the legal system."

Intellectual Property and Antitrust are complementary subjects that focus on issues critical to 21st-century society and global commerce. Intellectual property laws (patents, copyrights, and trademarks) create and protect important business and cultural assets; antitrust law, with its concern for monopoly power and restrictive trade practices, structure and control the way these assets are used. In addition, both areas of law are concerned with creating and protecting incentives for innovation and both areas utilize economic and political theory to analyze major policy issues. The law school has a deep curriculum in intellectual property and in antitrust, and students who seek to specialize in one of these areas are encouraged to take at least one course in the other.

Students interested in innovation issues should also consider taking courses in information law, including information privacy and electronic commerce. The study of information law considers the many ways in which the flow of information promotes innovation and the ways in which innovations in information technology affect broader societal interests, such as privacy and commerce.

Finally, the intellectual property and antitrust course offerings include courses and seminars focused on the international dimension of these two areas; students are encouraged to take one of these international courses to gain a full understanding of these two areas in the context of our globalized economy.
