

ADVISING

As a medical student at NYU Grossman School of Medicine, you are part of a community of talented researchers and physicians with a proud tradition of pioneering innovations in medical therapies that improve the human condition. During your time in medical school, you're supported by our network of faculty mentors and peers through the Violet Society Program (<https://med.nyu.edu/education/md-degree/current-md-students/violet-society-program/>).

The Violet Society Program combines academic coaching, career advising, and peer mentorship to support your wellbeing and personal growth, share career opportunities, and provide guidance. No matter what academic year you're in or which pathway you follow, we create a supportive community to enhance your professional development.
