SRPP-UH 1411J Race and Ethnicity in Comparative Perspective (4 Credits)

Typically offered Spring term of even numbered years

This course explores the concepts of race and ethnicity both in international comparative perspective, and with a special focus on their meaning and manifestations in Western Europe. Race and ethnicity are both ways of classifying human groups that arise under certain historical circumstances, with race in particular emerging in the contexts of imperialism and slavery. Students will consider how migration, state policies, and economic organization shape the classification and characterization of racial and ethnic groups. With Italy as an important site to be explored, students will also learn and apply social scientific methods like ethnography and content analysis in order to gauge stratification, prejudice and discrimination in diverse areas of social life.

SRPP-UH 1412J Wealth and Inequality in the Global City (4 Credits)

Typically offered January term

Rising income and wealth inequalities in many countries around the world, combined with the very high levels of concentration of wealth in the world economy, have become a topic of growing concern for social scientists and media commentators. For example, some estimates suggest that the richest 100 people in the world control half of all of the world's wealth, while billions of people around the globe survive are forced to survive on less than $2 a day. Our course will interrogate some of the key questions raised by rising inequality from a variety of perspectives. We will use our location in Accra as a laboratory for this investigation, taking advantage of the opportunity to both observe inequality and poverty up-close as well as exploring some of the ways in which governments and NGOs are attempting to ameliorate the worst of its effects. But we will frame our investigation in the global context: what happens in Accra is heavily shaped by larger global trends. We will ask: who is rich and who is poor, and how they are related to one another? To what extent is inequality (and even poverty) beneficial, harmful, or both to entire societies or key groups within them?

SRPP-UH 1413X Social Change and Development in the Arab World (4 Credits)

Typically offered occasionally

The "Arab World" is often lumped into one homogeneous category, which conceals the diversity found within this broad region. Keeping this in mind, this course will examine the unfolding of the "development project" in the postcolonial period and up to our present day in various Arab nation states. Beginning with an excerpt from the Arab Human Development Report, students will take a critical look at how development is defined and measured. Culture and religion have often been invoked as the major obstacles to development in the Arab World. This course will engage with this discourse as through exploring faces of modern day colonialism. What are the new tools and institutions of this new colonialism? How has this affected development and social struggle? The class will be organized around themes and corresponding case studies. Students will engage the idea of "development" in areas of education, economics, natural resources, women's rights, and social welfare. Students will also examine home-grown counter movements, focusing on youth efforts of organizing.

SRPP-UH 1415J Birds in Fragile Ecosystems: The Himalayas, the Middle East, and Hawai'i (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

Birds are essential markers of environmental change. Because they ignore geopolitical boundaries, they serve as key connections among disparate regions. They also play vital local roles, reinforcing cultural norms, and serve as magnificent exemplars of the natural world through their myriad adaptations. However, they are also at risk in different parts of the world, ranging from high mountain areas to flat, dry habitats, to island environments. Additionally, some species of birds exist in all three ecosystems (such as the Red-Vented Bulbul, the House Sparrow, the Common Myna, and others), and we will look at how environment has shaped these species' respective life histories. It will also give us a chance to revel in the sheer beauty of the region's birdlife. This class, based in Abu Dhabi, will examine the intersections of avian culture with fragile ecosystems - not just environmental ones, but cultural ecosystems as well, involving cultures that have been marginalized or otherwise deemed problematic in some way. Through readings, discussions, and local field trips in the UAE, students will interrogate the notion that birds can drive urban and rural dynamics, including water use, climate change, cultural practices, and local ecology. Note: Pending feasible international travel conditions this course will include a regional academic seminar to Nepal.

SRPP-UH 1416J Globally Sustainable Leadership Models (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

This course will delve into the definitions, histories, and emerging theories of diversity, equity, otherness, difference, inclusion, tolerance, bias, belonging, transformation, and identity formation. We will consider what these terms mean and their increasing prominence across countries/nations over the last 15 years. By engaging with various texts from different intellectual traditions, such as philosophy, cultural anthropology, political science, history, art, sociology, and economics, students will explore the following questions: How do they relate to nation, language, identity? What, where, when, how, and who "counts" as "diverse", or "different"? If NYU ABU Dhabi is one of the most "diverse campuses" globally, why is this important, and what might we learn? How might competing notions of diversity exist simultaneously? And how is "diversity" imagined in different national, political, social, and environmental contexts? In doing so, students will gain a nuanced understanding of the contrasting and emerging definitions of diversity, inclusion, and bias, their practical policy implications.

SRPP-UH 1419J Refuge Beyond Reach: Refugees, Asylum, and Forced Migration (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

How can we understand experiences of forced migration and politics that try to define, manage, and control refugees? We answer this question by examining the US as a country of forced migration rather than as "a nation of immigrants" which implies that people moved there voluntarily, and the UAE as a country that has received many forced migrants without legally calling them such. Students will engage basic conceptual debates about who is a refugee by examine experiences across the globe. Are economic migrants who move to meet basic levels of subsistence "refugees"? How should we conceive of other kinds of forced migrants, such as those fleeing climate change, natural disasters, or domestic violence? Participants will examine flight from countries of conflict, mass hosting in the developing countries of the Global South, resettlement in the rich democracies of the Global North, asylum-seeking, and diasporic engagement, and return. We will learn how refugees are embedded in a world system of control and humanitarian protection in which policymaking in one context is strongly shaped by actors elsewhere. Through interviews with UNHCR officials, participants will learn how these influences are expressed on the ground.

SRPP-UH 1610J Child Development and Social Policy in a Global Society (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

The overarching goals of this course are to introduce students to (1) the great variation in children's development in 21st century global society and (2) how public (government) and private (family, non-governmental and business) sector policies affect children's health, education and economic well-being in low-middle-and high-income countries. Students will learn how to critically examine historical trends in demography, economics and politics that influence child development; understand the role of science and of participatory/democratic processes in increasing the effectiveness of programs and policies affecting children; and analyze political/cultural/communications challenges to improving programs and policies for children. Each student will propose policy changes in a particular country chosen by the student that could dramatically improve the well-being of children.

SRPP-UH 1611 Introduction to Global Health (4 Credits)Typically offered occasionally

Despite the significant progress made towards achieving globally set targets for health in some countries, others - particularly in sub-Saharan Africa - are falling behind. This course introduces students to the main concepts of the public health field and the critical links between global health and social and economic development. Lectures explore major themes in global health, including the social determinants of health, the global distribution of disease burden and risk factors, key measures to address the disease burden in cost-effective ways, and the role of health systems and diverse global actors in responding to the health needs of populations worldwide. The course is global in coverage, but with a focus on low- and middle-income countries and on the health of the poor.

This course examines the relationships among poverty, disease, health and development. The class will consider the role of health in the context of socio-economic development and the Millennium Development Goals, and will explore where health falls among competing social service and development priorities. Students will discuss the promotion of pro-poor health policies and healthcare investments as a strategy to achieve poverty reduction and economic growth. The course will examine the practical constraints and challenges of fragile healthcare systems, and lessons from the experience of countries at different stages of economic development.

SRPP-UH 1613J 21st-Century International Human Rights (4 Credits)Typically offered occasionally

This course is designed to give an introduction to the law, policy, philosophy, institutions, and practice of modern international human rights. Human rights have a history that is national, regional, and international. Part I of the course presents an overview of the theory, history, and legal frameworks of the international human rights movement. Part II will explore these themes through the lens of the Argentinian experience. Students will study human rights violations during the Dirty War and national and international responses that sought to expose abuses, marshal human rights institutions to take action against them. This course also will examine efforts within Argentina over the last 30 years to balance reconciliation and accountability for past abuses. In Part III, this course will examine current human rights challenges facing governments, civil society groups, international organizations, and businesses today.

SRPP-UH 1614 Entrepreneurship (4 Credits)Typically offered occasionally

Whether as heroes or agents of creative destruction, entrepreneurs and their innovations have had a transformative influence on modern economic growth and the wealth of nations. The first part of the seminar introduces the classical and contemporary writings on the rise of entrepreneurial capitalism in the West and the global diffusion of modern entrepreneurial spirit and firm. Classical approaches pioneered the study of modern entrepreneurship in its rational orientation to profit making through innovative activity. Contemporary approaches shift the emphasis away from analysis of individual attributes and agency to focus on examining the role of social networks, organizational forms, and institutional environment in facilitating entrepreneurial activity. The last part of the seminar will focus on research on entrepreneurship using secondary sources and data available through the internet.

SRPP-UH 1616J Children, Youth and Sustainable Development of the World's Cities (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

Goal 11 of the 2015-2030 global Sustainable Development Goals is new on the global development agenda and focuses on cities and human settlements (Make cities and human settlements inclusive, safe, resilient and sustainable). The goal reflects the global demographic shift towards urban residence (over half of the world's population now lives in cities). This course will consider innovations from around the world in making cities sustainable for children and youth, who represent the future of sustainable societies. In addition, urban innovations for sustainability will be reviewed. Fieldwork abroad will provide opportunities for the observation of programs as well as meetings with NGO staff, youth and other urban leaders, and will supplement the readings and discussions. Topics covered will include supporting youth livelihoods, learning and health programs, arts programs, infrastructure investments, environmental sustainability, transportation, migrant-origin youth, governance and innovation.

SRPP-UH 1617 Sociology of Entrepreneurship (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall

Entrepreneurship is the principal source of economic development, technological innovation, and creation of wealth and jobs in market economies. This course is concerned with entrepreneurship, with a special emphasis on the recent work by sociologists and sociologically-oriented organizational theorists that investigate central questions in entrepreneurship. Throughout the semester, we will understand various ways in which the social sciences have provided theoretical insights into entrepreneurial behavior in its broader social, institutional, technological and cross-national contexts. Furthermore, we will also understand entrepreneurship from a more practical view by utilizing case studies. Additionally, we will explore timely important topics related to entrepreneurship, and identify sources of data / information during the last few classes.

SRPP-UH 1618J Political Abdications (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

Why do groups renounce their capacity to act? Why for instance did the United States Congress relinquish its constitutional right to declare war to the benefit of President Bush in October 2002? How can we explain that unions, parties and civic associations fail to engage in collective action when faced with policies directly threatening their interests and survival? Whether they are explicit or not, abdications punctuate and structure the realm of politics. They condition power relationships, patterns of inequalities and regime change. This course will gauge the significance and the scope of abdication in politics, review possible explanations, investigate paradigmatic cases (e.g., August 1789 in France, March 1933 in Germany, November 1976 in Spain, 1989 in Eastern Europe), and draw the implications of this analysis for our understanding of group behavior and decision-making.

SRPP-UH 1619J Philanthropy Today: How Organized Money Fuels Innovation, Institutions and Movements (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

Philanthropy is one of the most powerful sectors in the world, shaping health systems, arts and culture, higher education, human rights and numerous other public and private institutions and goods in many countries. But to many, these influential institutions and donors, like George Soros, Bill Gates and a growing number of newly-philanthropic tech billionaires, seem opaque and often unaccountable. This course will explore the ancient roots of philanthropy, the creation of foundations in the modern era, their social impact, and their local context, including the legal and tax regimes which give rise to them. It will also delve into emerging trends, debates, practices and controversies, illuminated by case studies, talks with philanthropic leaders, site visits and intensive, ongoing exercise that will enable students to identify an area of philanthropic interest and need, choose an organization, and undertake all the responsibilities for making an actual grant.

SRPP-UH 1620J Himalayas: Geopolitics and Ecology of Melting Mountains Water Towers, Sky Rivers and the Sponge (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

Among the mountain ranges of the world, the Himalayas are perhaps the most spectacular, mysterious, and majestic. Along with the Tibetan Plateau the Himalayas are home to 15,000 glaciers that carry as much as 12,000 cubic kilometers of ice down the mountains. The water they provide is a lifeline for more than 2.5 billion people, flowing through circuitous paths of the Indus, the Ganges, the Brahmaputra, the Mekong, the Yangtze and the Huang He (Yellow River). While these mountains span geographic boundaries across India, Nepal, China, Bhutan, and Pakistan, sovereign states have sought to territorialize the land, the water, the air, the ecosystems, and the people. The climate crisis has exacerbated regional tensions because as the Himalayas melt and their water sources diminish, a race to secure access to fresh water is quickly turning into competition. This course offers a fresh narrative frame for understanding the Himalayan water crisis. Glaciers, lakes, rivers, groundwater, and weather patterns constitute integral parts of the region's intricate and holistic system of water generated, blocked, and moved through these mountains. The class will examine how the region's complex water issues are not adequately captured by statist IR theorizations. It will emphasize the roles played by diverse local cultures, regional geopolitics, ecologies, and scientific analyses of earth systems to better understand what constitutes a lifeline for a third of humanity. Note: Pending feasible international travel conditions, this course will include a seminar Nepal.

SRPP-UH 1701 International Migration in Global Perspective (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall

This course introduces students to foundational texts and theories within migration studies, engaging with the work of key migration scholars who have helped shape and extend our understanding of why and how international migration occurs. For the first half of the course, students will explore a different theoretical question relating to international migration each week e.g. Why do people leave their home countries? Who actually makes the migration decision? Through these questions, students will explore the role played by individual-level factors, households, networks, industry actors, and governments in shaping the migration processes. During the second half of the course, students will be exposed to questions about the post-migration experience and migrants' impacts on their sending and receiving countries/communities. The literature on select categories of migrants (e.g. trafficking victims, refugees/asylum seekers, undocumented migrants, highly skilled migrants, lifestyle migrants, etc.) will also be introduced to students, giving them an opportunity to understand the specific issues faced by each migrant sub-population pre- and post-migration.

In this seminar, students will come to understand the diverse and dynamic roles that religious and cultural Islam can play in contemporary societies, especially those in the "Middle East" and North Africa. After critically examining what might be meant by Islam and Muslims in the first place, students will use social scientific case studies to investigate how Islam does (or does not) come to matter in various sectors of society, including government and the state, the legal system, politics and social movements, gender relations, sexuality, education, the economy, popular culture, and everyday life. By the end of this course, students will be able to critically analyze the ways that religious and cultural Islam can impact society and social life. Each student will be expected to complete a final research project exploring the core questions posed by the course.

SRPP-UH 1811 Discipline (4 Credits)Typically offered occasionally

What could a European Medieval bestseller have to do with contemporary American 12-Step programs? What might link a Benedictine monk and a player on the University of Alabama football team? What is the connection between playing a Bach fugue and ice-skating? The critical relationship between these unlikely pairs can be examined through the notion of discipline. This course will begin with an introduction to the general concept of 'discipline', and will continue according to a set of subtypes of discipline (spiritual; aesthetic; martial; organizational; industrial; iterative). These subtypes will be examined using historical and ethnographic evidence, short weekly readings, and by you performing your own ethnographic observation. By exploring the origins, techniques, and results of discipline in practice, we may better understand the ways in which society operates. The purpose of the seminar will be to identify and examine the set of practices that seem to lead to orderly, disciplined, behavior.

SRPP-UH 1812J Sociology of Morality: Good, Evil, Altruism, and Norms (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

This class will examine morality and immorality from a sociological perspective. Why do people disagree about what counts as morally good and bad, right and wrong, admirable and despicable? Under what conditions are people more likely to behave altruistically and cooperatively? Under what conditions are immorality and evil more likely? The sociology of morality investigates people's moral understandings, moral and immoral behavior, and societies' moral institutions and norms. Unlike philosophers and ethicists, sociologists don't try to answer moral questions. Rather, they conduct empirical research about individuals', groups', and societies' morals. This class has a reading-and-analysis component and a hands-on research component. Students will read and discuss social scientific works on morality, altruism, cooperation, evil, moral institutions, and norms. Further, they'll develop their own research projects about morality and collect their own observational data in Berlin.

SRPP-UH 1813X Family and Gender in the Arab World: Continuity and Change (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring

Social scientists have in the past described family structures and gender roles in the Arab World as based on relatively uniform and unchanging principles. However, during the last two decades many Arab societies have been subject to tremendous changes. In this course we will examine how in the social sciences the "classical" Arab family along with its underlying kinship systems and gender orders has been conceived; and how modern developments, such as urbanization, women's education, work migration, war and exile, assisted reproduction, genetic counseling programs, TV serials, etc., are contributing to the emergence of new forms of family and gender. Also, we shall scrutinize the societal challenges brought about by these developments, such as the economic hardships of young couples, the erosion of "traditional" support networks for elderly and diseased persons, and the "neo-liberalization" of marriage. Finally, we shall take a close look at the various ways in which contemporary Arab men and women define, negotiate, and legitimate their gender identities by drawing on Islamic values, traditional ideas and practices as well as national and transnational discourses.

SRPP-UH 1814J Language, Religion, and Ethnicity (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

What is language? Where is language? What are religion and ethnicity? And above all, what is the connection between them? The seminar offers a linguistic view of religion and ethnicity and looks into the sociolinguistic history, society, and culture of the United States and the Arab world. We will consider the great diversity of communicative systems we encounter both as a source of enrichment for individuals and the nation as a whole. In addition, we will study the universal phenomenon of language change and how it affects our understanding of language behavior religiously and ethnically. Students will be introduced to basic concepts of linguistics with an emphasis on descriptive linguistics and sociolinguistics. Students will be exposed to sociolinguistic methods to examine the relationship between language and religion, language and nationalism, language and power, language and ethnicity, language and gender, language and space, and language and education. In the course we will use some pockets of language use in the UAE as an opportunity to conduct field study. This will be done through the use of the IPA (International Phonetic Alphabet) and the method of Linguistic Landscape. Note: Pending current travel conditions, this course has an overnight stay in a hotel in Ras Al Khaimah and another overnight stay in a hotel (possibly) in Sharjah.

SRPP-UH 1815J Diversity, Inclusion and Tolerance?: Contemplations on 21st Century Identity Formation (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

This course will delve into the definitions, histories and emerging theories of "diversity", "otherness", "difference", "tolerance" and identity formation (national, local, personal). Recently new laws and regulations in Europe have emerged, as well new "diversity" pledges in the US - it is argued that key to our global futures is "diversification", but what does this mean? What/Who "counts" as "diverse", "different"? NYU Abu Dhabi is one of the most "diverse campuses" in the world? What might we learn, or how might this be important in higher education? How might competing notions of "diversity" and "tolerance" exist simultaneously and how might "diversity" be imagined in different national contexts? During the course, we will read and explore a variety of materials from different intellectual traditions including, but not limited to the work of philosophers, cultural anthropologists, political scientists, historians, artists, sociologists, and economists who have given consideration to both the conceptual questions posed, as well as the practical implications. Finally, we will consider the connections to the commitment to the Charter for Tolerance in the UAE.

This course introduces the key concepts and theoretical approaches in the sociological study of crime and deviance. The objective of the class is not to provide a mass of hard facts about crime and deviance, but to make students familiar with different ways of viewing and explaining crime and deviance and to develop a critical, analytical perspective and an ability to use concepts and theories from the criminological tradition to frame arguments about crime-related issues from a sociological perspective.

SRPP-UH 1817J Birthing Inequity: Teenage Pregnancy and Covid-19 Public Health Measures in Uganda (4 Credits)Typically offered Summer and January terms

Well-intended Covid-19 measures to stem the pandemic led to the closure of schools and exacerbated conditions that spurred a spike in teen pregnancies in most countries, including Uganda. This course looks at Covid-19 as a destabilizing moment that has not only worsened factors that increase vulnerability and exploitation of teenage girls but also resulted in a myriad of secondary crises. Through reviewing emerging research reports as well as collecting and doing content-analysis of stories of the lived experiences of slum-urban and rural teenage dwellers and gatekeepers, students will explore the problem and viability of potential interventions concerning social and economic development, family structure, socio-cultural norms of silence, blame and shame, the role of community and men as gatekeepers, and the post-covid targeted government policy prioritizations and reforms. Students will prepare a final report that reflects their findings on continuing vulnerability factors and recommendations for re-thinking strategy/interventions in the ongoing and post-Covid-19 pandemic. The course is expected to include select exemplars and virtual interactive seminars by faculty in Uganda and Abu Dhabi. Note: Pending feasible international travel conditions, this course will include a seminar in Uganda.

SRPP-UH 1818 Gender, Policy and Politics (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring

This course is designed to provide a survey of gender in politics and policies around the world. The course is divided into three modules. First module provides an overview of access to formal political power. This module discusses women's participation in politics, the history of suffrage, and role of quotas in politics. It also discusses the role of activists and social movements in highlighting gender-based policy agendas. The second module focuses on some major issues of public policy which are related to gender including reproductive and gender affirming healthcare; work and employment; gender based violence; education and global economy. Final module focuses more specifically on different regions of the world to discuss the specific challenges in creating gender equity resulting from geopolitical and historical specificities.

SRPP-UH 1819J Sports and the Political (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

Beyond breathtaking football goals and powerful basketball dunks, sport is a vital lens for analyzing theories and frameworks bound to nationalism, economic development, gender and racial inequalities. Utilizing historical, sociological and anthropological methods this course examines key issues that reveal the sociopolitical conflicts of the past, and perhaps distinct challenges our communities will face in our capitalist world. From the development of cricket and identity formation in British colonial territories to the questions of labor, stadium development and urban planning, sport should be understood beyond masculine bravado, violence and the joy and agony of competition. It is a serious vehicle for conceptualizing and investigating the triumphs and limitations of our society and its complicated history. In what ways does sports reify concepts of race and gender? How do governments use sport and sport tourism to regenerate urban spaces? Reading critical sport studies texts from Asian, European and American scholarly perspectives, in addition to local excursions, this course illuminates the significance of sport in shaping culture and politics in our global society.

SRPP-UH 1820J Participatory Action Research in Neurodiverse Communities (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

The course offers a practical introduction to the theoretical and methodological issues of participatory action research, an approach to qualitative research that involves those being studied in the design and conduct of the research as well as the translation of its findings toward social change. It is frequently used in schools of education and public health to provide a more inclusive way of doing research with marginalized populations. Students will have hands-on experience in carrying out participatory action research with neurodiverse and autistic individuals in the UAE (people of determination) through collaborative research design, reciprocal interviewing, and participant observation.

SRPP-UH 2212 Epidemiology: Knowledge and Skills Foundation Course (4 Credits)Typically offered occasionally

This foundation course in epidemiology will provide the students with three separate- but interrelated - components: 1) a section that focuses on ethical issues in epidemiologic research; 2) a section that focuses on fundamental epidemiologic research designs and the interpretation of results from the array of designs; and, 3) a section that focuses on building skills in insightfully reading and interpreting published epidemiologic scientific articles. The overall goal of the course is to produce thinking world citizens who can use their epidemiologic knowledge and understanding for active decision-making about their own health as well as the health and welfare of the communities in which they live in the future.

SRPP-UH 2213JQ Sports and Society (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

How do sports reflect, reveal or shape major social, economic and political values or changes? Can sports be used to bridge or widen divides? Can sports be used as a lab to test social science theories? A growing body of work tackles these questions. Scholars are recognizing the important role sports plays in people's individual and social lives and the way sports provides a venue where debates and conflicts are played out. Researchers, NGOs and governments are using sports to build relationships among individuals from different groups in an attempt to foster understanding, empathy and cooperation. At the same time, researchers are beginning to use sports data to test social science theories. The rapid growth in computing resources combined with readily available performance and event data has resulted in a burst of work across fields such as political science, sociology, economics and psychology. In part 1, we use a variety of case studies to explore how sports can offer a lens through which to study society and, more specifically, politics. Part 2 puts sports data to use in testing social science theories of identity, trust, and prejudice, among others. Our focus will be on how sports is used to bridge ethnic and religious divides and the role of sports in building understanding between traditionally rival groups in Israel and Palestine. The J-Term 2024 section of this course will be held in Abu Dhabi, UAE.

SRPP-UH 2214 Interview Methods (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall

This course serves as an introduction to qualitative research methods with a focus on interviewing. Students will discuss a range of interview-based research methods. In qualitative research, researchers often have a significant impact on the lives of study participants and are in turn changed by the experience of fieldwork. This carries with it some weighty responsibilities and introduces unique issues of ethics and data interpretation. Students will deal systematically with these issues and with the procedures of research design, transcribing interviews, coding and analyzing data, and finally writing up the research in a coherent paper. Students will have extensive opportunity to learn through doing. One goal of the course is to get students to practice and hone their craft.

SRPP-UH 2410 Gender and Society (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring

In every society, people are assigned to one sex (male or female) at birth based on their anatomy, and this classification affects how they are expected to behave as gendered individuals (men/women/trans) and the opportunities and constraints they confront. However, how gender is organized varies between societies and subgroups in societies and across time. This means that genders and gendered traits are products of social practices and institutions. This course draws from sociology and other social sciences, to help students understand the social forces that create gender ideologies, differences between men's and women's social roles, and inequality between men's and women's access to power and money.

SRPP-UH 2412X Islamist Social Movements in the Middle East (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring

This course critically examines theories and case studies of religious social movements with a special focus on Islamist social movements in the Middle East. The course will begin by introducing students to the theories of social movements, highlighting the different repertoires movements adopt based on the political and cultural contexts in which they are embedded. It will then move on to exploring the role of Islam in local and global social movements. The course will turn to empirical cases of Islamist movements, analyzing their characteristics in relation to topics such as nationalism, colonialism, human rights, inequality, civil society, Sufism, and the role of women. Students will compare Islamist movements from a wide variety of countries in the region, including Egypt, Turkey, Iran, Lebanon, Palestine, Saudi Arabia as well as transnational and jihadi movements. The class will end with a discussion of the popular upheavals in the region commonly referred to under the rubric of the Arab Spring.

SRPP-UH 2413J Connecting Neighborhoods and Health: An Introduction to Spatial Epidemiology (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

This course will focus on Spatial Epidemiology, i.e. the spatial distribution and spatial determinants of health and well-being in human populations across the globe. The course will provide students with a historical, theoretical and methodological overview of the field of Spatial Epidemiology from a cross-national perspective. This is an introductory-level course; as such, the course intentionally is broad, covering a range of issues and topics (e.g. neighborhood characteristic assessment methods, methods to examine neighborhood boundaries, identification of spatial clusters ["hot spots"] of disease, quantitative methods to evaluate connections between neighborhoods and health, and connecting neighborhoods to health disparities). The course will consist of readings, group discussion, and individual inquiry, to examine the influence of neighborhood factors in health in different geographic contexts. Over the course all students will propose an original research project designed to answer a specific research question connecting neighborhoods and health. This proposal will be your final project for the course and you will present that research to the class.

SRPP-UH 2414 Global Family Policies and Laws (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall

This course introduces students to the role of public policies in different domains of family life adopting a cross-national comparative perspective. It will consider family domains such as fertility, marriage, housework, childrearing, migration, elderly care, etc., and discuss recent scholarship and policy reports (from OECD, UNICEF, World Bank, etc.) problematizing: i) how/why families are changing around the world, and ii) how different policies sustain or hinder some of these changes. The nature of the course is dynamic, interactive, and applied to concrete case studies of policies that have been designed and implemented in different parts of the world, including childcare subsidies, family planning programs, child labor provisions, income assistance for single parents, changes in age at marriage laws, LGBTQ+ rights, parental leave provisions, housing assistance, etc. In doing so, the course emphasizes change, culture, the polity, and the economy as key contextual variables in shaping the relationship between families and family policies throughout the world. Lectures will strike a 50-50 balance between policies implemented in high-income and low- and middle-income societies.

SRPP-UH 2416X Gulf Urban Societies (4 Credits)Typically offered occasionally

The spectacular development of Gulf cities in the second half of the 20th century was accompanied by great demographic and social change. This course, conceived as an introduction to the field of Gulf studies, explores the transformations of Gulf urban societies in the modern and contemporary periods, as well as their social, political, and urban consequences. With a critical approach to both official historical narratives and dominant analytical paradigms such as the rentier state theory, we will rely on social history and anthropology to explore social processes at the scale of the city. We will contrast the production of space through urban planning and its institutional actors with the way city-dwellers appropriate and shape the materiality of urban space in their daily lives, from street corners to upscale shopping malls. We will explore the linguistic, ethnic, and religious diversity of Gulf cities' inhabitants - both nationals and foreign residents - through looking at historical and contemporary migrations and the complex questions they raise in terms of belonging and citizenship. From there, we will examine how social change has affected gender roles and brought about transformations in marriage and family life which have become a major topic of concern for governments.

SRPP-UH 2417 Global Stratification (4 Credits)Typically offered occasionally

The acute prevalence of stratification and inequality in contemporary industrial societies presents a particularly pertinent puzzle for social science researchers. On the one hand, there is the expectation that the vestiges of a post-Enlightenment heritage will offer these developed societies the framework to construct a truly egalitarian social and economic order. At the same time, we are trained theoretically to confront the inevitability of stratification, especially in societies motivated by capitalism. In turn, this brings us to an academic dilemma that rests at the very cornerstone of evolved meritocracies: if stratification is inevitable, then is inequality acceptable so long as it is "fairly" achieved? This "fair" justification for inequality is pervasive and most easily accepted: and in turn, problematic. Because so much of current inequality in society can be justified, most social processes do not seem extreme or blatantly unequal until it is too late. But whether or not we recognize these individual micro-processes, inequality and stratification in the developed first world is both extreme and rising.

SRPP-UH 2418 Politics and Society (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall

To many, the state appears as the preeminent nexus of political power in the contemporary world. It controls population movements, it wages war, it hands out rights, it sets the law. Indeed, the random happenstance of being born in a particular country is the greatest determinate of a person's life chances. Yet the nation-state is not all-powerful, nor is it the only way of organizing a polity, as a long history of empire and colonialism demonstrates. This course will unpack the operation of state power and its intersection with society, while also probing the state's limits, contradictions, and alternatives to it. This class will begin by introducing some of the canonical writings of political sociology that set out some preliminaries of the relationship between politics and society. It will then examine the nature of empire and some of its legacies as well as considering the impact of nationalism, citizenship, and the regulation of migration. The second half of the course will turn to social movements as well as the impact of social media on political participation, before ending with a discussion of the rise of populism, neoliberalism and the growth and limits of globalization.

SRPP-UH 2419 Migration Policy (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring

This course introduces students to key areas of contemporary policy concern in the realm of international migration - including immigrant integration, naturalization and citizenship, border control, brain drain, temporary guestworker regimes, refugees, undocumented migration, etc. Adopting a global perspective, it focuses on both the international and domestic policies that deal with migration issues and migrants, and highlights the ongoing difficulties in developing a global migration regime. By the end of this course, students will have acquired a shared vocabulary on the key organizations, treaties, and policy instruments that relate to international migration flows. Students will become familiar with key migration policy debates from sending country, receiving country, and bilateral and multilateral perspectives. Students will also critically engage with the ethics of migration policies and migration management. Finally, the course provides students with the opportunity to suggest migration policy improvements in areas of interest through the in-depth analysis of a migration "problem" of their choosing and the writing of a migration policy report.

SRPP-UH 2420 The Mafia Business: Sociological Approach (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall

Organized crime (or broadly understood 'mafia') means the systematic use of force in market operations. This borders on state power (use of force) and capitalism (money-making). Yet the mafia undermines both institutions. Why? Is it a conspiracy? Deviance? Immigrant subculture? How to study the social issues for which our IRB might never grant permission? The sociological approach would first ask where and when does mafia occur. From the original 'classic' case of Sicily, we extend a theory to understand the varieties of 'violent' entrepreneurs: Chinese triads, Japan's yakudza, Soviet-era vor v zakone, Indian dakoit, South African tsotsi, Latin American narco-cartels, etc. A robust theory must help us to speak meaningfully on policy dilemmas, public concerns, and, of course, films like the Godfather.

SRPP-UH 2610 Introduction to Public Policy (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall and Spring

Public policy affects our lives in profound ways even when we are not aware of them. What we eat, how we recycle, or when we disclose personal information on the internet are all examples of choices largely determined by public policies. This course is an introduction to public policy, why it is important, and how it involves simultaneous ethical, political, and problem-solving processes. The course introduces students to the ways in which a variety of actors and institutions at the national and transnational levels interactively contribute to public policy. The course is divided into two parts. The first part provides an overview of the basic concepts underlying the public policy process and the second part provides critical perspectives on public policy-making in theory and practice.

Issues such as poverty, inequalities of access to resources as well as social and political institutions, and the maldistribution of opportunities for education, health care, and employment compel governments everywhere to develop social policies that attempt to improve the well-being of individuals and families. They do so through a bundle of programs known as the welfare state. This course aims to provide both an advanced introduction to actually social policy regimes in both the developed as well as the developing welfare states around the world, as well as some of the contemporary policy debates concerning future directions. The class will also pay attention and gain some direct experience in developing concrete social policy proposals aimed at addressing important societal problems.

SRPP-UH 2612X State Formation: The Case of the United Arab Emirates (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall

Why did the West grow modern first and what happened to the rest after 1500? How the improbable combination of wars and taxation, revolution and nationalism, industrial weapons and colonialism shaped the modern states in Europe? What did the Middle Eastern rulers do in order to develop and secure their independence? How did the UAE achieve its singular success at present? What could sustain it into the future? This course seeks answers to big questions in a comparative perspective informed by macrohistorical theories. Ultimately, we look for the rightful place of the seven Emirates on this world scale.

This course explores theoretical and empirical connections between economic development, urbanization, urban poverty and distress and state/non-state responses to urban poverty and distress. The course begins with an exploration of theoretical and conceptual perspectives on urbanization and welfare state policies, then moves on to examine illustrative cases from global north and south cities that challenge and complicate reigning theories and concepts. Students will be asked to compare and contrast historical and contemporary patterns of urban poverty across global north and south regions, with a focus on the limits and possibilities of social policies (state- and non-state-sponsored) for addressing urban distress.

SRPP-UH 2614X Women and Work in the Gulf (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring

This course critically examines how women feature in contemporary debates about employment, development, and nationalism in the context of the Gulf Cooperative Council countries. The course provides a philosophical foundation for debates about women, work, and difference based on feminist theories. Students will explore postcolonial perspectives on feminism and difference, feminist Marxist critiques of capitalism, and feminist Islamist critiques of modernity. The course provides an overview of how women in the Gulf feature in contemporary discourses as participants in "globally competitive" economies, mothers of "future generations of citizens", and symbols of "tradition and culture". The third part of the course addresses public policy and legal frameworks shaping women's work, exploring how different categories of "women" are produced through public policy programs such as workforce nationalization, education policy, social policy, and the interplay of national and international laws governing domestic work, human trafficking, and domestic abuse. The course will host a number of academics, activists, and policymakers.

Non-communicable diseases (NCD's) including heart disease, obesity, depression, and dementia were thought to impact the health of more developed, affluent countries while the major health issue for low and middle-income countries was acute infectious disease. Over the last decade, NCD's have begun to critically impact the health of most populations across the globe. This course seeks to identify a number of complex issues related to the emergence of NCD's globally and compare the disease experience in low and middle-income countries to high-income countries. The course will identify the social determinants of NCD's and explore the recent impact of the "epidemiologic" transition in low-income countries with emphasis on West Africa.

SRPP-UH 2618 Welfare States in Comparative Perspective (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring

How do different countries respond to the challenges of poverty and economic inequality? How do they protect workers against the risks of unemployment, accident, illness, disability and old age? This course examines social policy in both advanced post-industrial democracies and the "Global South". The course will consider various ways in which "welfare regimes" have been characterized and classified, particularly with regard to how welfare provision is divided up among state, market and family. The course will explore how social policies originate and change, paying attention to the role of organized interests, state institutions, and partisan politics in these processes. Lastly, the course will examine how contemporary challenges - including globalization, population aging, post-industrialism and women's workforce participation - have pressured and transformed welfare states. In all of these areas, students will pay particular attention to gender: how social policies have been shaped by, reinforced, and redressed gender inequalities.

SRPP-UH 2620 Education and Society (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall

Designing for social impact is complex work. It requires consideration of many stakeholders and factors that could affect outcomes, a deep understanding of people, an ability to see the bigger picture, and conviction despite incomplete information. It also demands the ability to discover, assess, and choose interventions with the potential for impact. In this course, students will learn the process of human-centered, systems design and gain familiarity with integrative tools to tackle complex organizational or societal challenges toward positive impact. Students will reflect on what is a "challenge" and what it means to have "impact" and internalize theory, methods, and processes for human-centered, systems thinking and design. To apply theory to practice, students will be put into teams to undergo a design process to identify a problem and design an initiative, policy intervention, program, product, or enterprise for impact at the local organizational or community level. This course would be of interest to students who aspire to be innovative leaders in social entrepreneurship, nonprofit, philanthropy, government, and social impact fields.

SRPP-UH 2621 Bound by Borders: Sociology of Law and Migration (4 Credits)Typically offered occasionally

This course takes a sociological view of law as it applies to international migration, as well as of its origins and effects. Specifically, it asks why migration laws differ among countries, why they take particular patterns (e.g. selection by race, skills, gender), how laws change over time, how they shape inequalities in receiving and sending countries, and how they affect people's everyday lives. The course considers explanations of the peculiar policy making alliances that emerge around migration, and of factors that shape the success of policy proposals. The approach is to compare migration related phenomena like refuge and statelessness across countries over time.

SRPP-UH 2622J Seminar in Sociogenomics (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

The cost of genotyping is dropping faster than Moore's law is bringing down the price of computing power. As a result, genetic data is pouring into social scientific studies, raising old debates about genes and IQ, racial differences, criminal justice, political polarization and privacy. As it turns out, serious analysis of genes and society often yields counter-intuitive results. For example, genes matter for IQ and social class, but they often act as an engine of social mobility thanks to the mixing up that takes place through recombination. Meanwhile, genetic analysis does not reify folk racial categories but challenges them: Due to a population bottleneck coming out of Africa, a Caucasian is probably more genetically similar to Inuit than are two Ugandans 200 miles apart. This course explores this new field of sociogenomics - what the genome tells us about our collective past, present society and what the future holds in terms of genetic prediction. Abu Dhabi is an ideal site: it is a cosmopolitan hub that draws diverse immigrants; the Arabian Peninsula was the site of the great population bottleneck; and the UAE has a high rate of first-cousin marriage.

SRPP-UH 2623J Cultures of Addiction: A Bio-Social View (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

Globally there is no consensus about the nature of addiction: is it a biological problem of neuroreceptors and genetic inheritance? A character problem of poor decision-making and impulsivity? Or a social problem of unemployment and narcotraffic? This course strives for a multifaceted, biosocial understanding of addiction not only as a clinical problem, but also as a cultural symbol that drives global economics, law enforcement, and pharmaceutical development. The course begins with a history of popular and scientific understandings of addiction, from 19th-century Europe, the Americas, Africa, Latin America and Asia, up to contemporary neuroscientific knowledge, before exploring critical social analysis of class, ethnicity/race, and gender in relation to addiction biotechnologies. Asking how these approaches might shape clinical practice, community interventions, and public policy, students will compare drug policies internationally, through ethnographies of addicted people living under those policies.

SRPP-UH 2624JX Disability in a Global Context: Advancing Inclusion in the UAE (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

The course explores the implications and meaning of having a disability in global contexts. The overarching goal is to introduce students to key issues facing persons with disabilities. Using the UAE as a case study, the course examines how public (government) and private (outside of the government) policies and practices, in the education, health, cultural, sport, transportation, social welfare, and tourism sectors, affect the inclusion of persons with disabilities. The students will also explore and identify factors, including how international trends in disability and inclusion and local cultural beliefs, influence inclusion .

SRPP-UH 2625JX Making Women Matter: Case Studies from the GCC (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

Case Studies from the GCC: Women's rights have been a hypervisible feature of the development of the modern state in the GCC. For example, women's mobility and access to work in desegregated settings in Saudi Arabia are an important and highly publicized part of its recent economic and political reform efforts. In the UAE, the Gender Balance Council was established to design policies that support women's empowerment in coordination with the OECD and UN. How do these top-down empowerment initiatives influence the day-to-day lives of women and men in the GCC? What kinds of femininities and masculinities are reshaped and negotiated in response to these programs? How do the practices and discourses of "state feminism" and "global competitiveness" simultaneously strengthen and obscure important aspects of gender equality? In this course, we investigate how national level policies influence women's career paths in the GCC. We explore how women's entry into the labor market involves navigating a variety of discourses about gender, class, religion, ethnicity, citizenship, and other context specific intersectional identities.

SRPP-UH 2626J Knowledge Translation: Bridging Science, Policy, and Practice in Inclusive Education (4 Credits)Typically offered January term

How do we apply research evidence? Knowledge translation (KT) is a bridge between research, policy, and practice in an effort to strengthen public service sectors and improve outcomes. Essentially, KT is an interactive process involving exchanges between researchers who create new knowledge and those who use it. The focus of this course will be on the theory and application of knowledge translation with the goal of promoting evidence-based policy, practice, and research utilization. Using data generated from Professor Njelesani's research study on inclusive education in Zambia, students will develop culturally and contextually appropriate KT products (e.g., policy briefs, scientific abstracts and posters, website content, infographics, visual art, digital storytelling, etc.) based on the needs of multiple stakeholders (e.g., education and disability policymakers, researchers, educators, disabled persons' organizations, and persons with disabilities) to disseminate knowledge and improve research uptake. Note: Pending feasible international travel conditions, this course will include a seminar in Zambia.

SRPP-UH 2627 Organizations and Society (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall

We live in a society of organizations. We are born inside organizations (hospitals), we are educated inside organizations (schools, universities), we work inside organizations (companies, non-profits, government), and when we die, we may be buried by organizations (funeral service firms, religious organizations). Hence, we cannot really understand what drives economic, technological, social, and political change without reference to organizations. In this course, students will endeavor to understand the organizations that comprise society by looking at how they are shaped by their environment and propose solutions to organizational problems arising from external challenges and internal dynamics. This course has two primary units. First, students will learn the organizational decision-making process and organizational structures to understand the concept of organization as an independent entity. Then, students will explore the major organizational theories that guide contemporary understandings of the relationships between organizations and their environments, such as institutional norms, social capital (or networks), and organizational learning and cognition.

SRPP-UH 2628J Lead With a Story: How to Change the World through Public Narrative (4 Credits)Typically offered Summer and January terms

In the context of an increasingly polarized global society, this course seeks to train students to mobilize diverse communities together for the greater good through the art of public narrative. Unleashing the power of storytelling, students will articulate their values and explore the ways it can be shared. The course will draw on case studies from historical and contemporary leaders who have achieved success in creating sustainable change, as well as interrogating relevant current affairs as they arise and viewing storytelling through a global lens. Students will develop skills to understand the power of stories more profoundly, how to use them in their own lives and within the frameworks of institutions and organizations. They will be able to identify better social change strategies and the importance of storytelling to enhance effectiveness and emotional connection.

SRPP-UH 2629 Education Policy Analysis and Design (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring

The primary objective of this course is to give students an introduction to key issues in educational policy making, educational planning and implementation, the role of monitoring and evaluation, and policy processes and practices from global, comparative perspectives. At the end of the course, students will be able to think critically about the linkages between research, policymaking, and practice in improving the quality of education in various country contexts, especially those in the Global South. This course introduces students to the case study approach to educational policy analysis, to the sector study assessment of educational systems and the role of organizations (e.g., international organizations, aid agencies, nonprofits), and to evaluation in the field of international development and education. Also, students will have opportunity to either gain hands-on experience with education development project design and planning by writing a policy analysis paper or developing an education project proposal.

SRPP-UH 2630 Social Impact Design for Policy and Business (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring

Designing for social impact is complex work. It requires consideration of many stakeholders and factors that could affect outcomes, a deep understanding of people, an ability to see the bigger picture, and conviction despite incomplete information. It also demands the ability to discover, assess, and choose interventions with the potential for impact. In this course, students will learn the process of human-centered, systems design and gain familiarity with integrative tools to tackle complex organizational or societal challenges toward positive impact. Students will reflect on what is a “challenge” and what it means to have “impact” and internalize theory, methods, and processes for human-centered, systems thinking and design. To apply theory to practice, students will be put into teams to undergo a design process to identify a problem and design an initiative, policy intervention, program, product, or enterprise for impact at the local organizational or community level. This course would be of interest to students who aspire to be innovative leaders in social entrepreneurship, nonprofit, philanthropy, government, and social impact fields.

SRPP-UH 2801X Community- Engaged Scholarship: Addressing Social Hierarchies in the UAE (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring

An exciting question that appears when conducting social science research is how it can be applied beyond academia. In this course, students will engage with research on social hierarchies (race, class, gender, citizenship) in the UAE while exploring what it can look like to benefit the communities this research is about. There have been international efforts by academics to address social hierarchies in various ways, ranging from university public outreach or service-based learning. But the UAE has its own limitations, restrictions and opportunities. What can community-engaged scholarship look like in this context? The class will explore the research that navigates social hierarchies in the UAE. What assumptions does this research challenge (or promote)? How does it allow us to see the complexity of different communities in an often-misrepresented region? More importantly: Can this research be used to benefit the communities it is about? Students will look at examples of applied research conducted in the UAE, whether being applied in communities or informing public policy.

SRPP-UH 3210 Practicum in Social Research (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring term of even numbered years

Original research projects are intellectual fun, but they are also a demanding craft. This course prepares you for the challenge of conducting original research. Through a detailed, creative comparison of two seemingly disparate research approaches common in the social sciences—ethnography and digital social science—we will discuss how to find an interesting question, design a way to answer it, and communicate your work. Our comparison will also explore what ethnographic and digital data and analyses can learn from each other, as well as from other common approaches, such as experiments. In addition, we will plan, write, and fine-tune a project proposal by debating and critiquing each other’s ideas during presentations, one-on-one meetings, and class-wide workshops. As a whole, the course provides a strong foundation for senior Capstones, as well as future research projects.

SRPP-UH 3214 Social Networks (4 Credits)Typically offered Spring and January terms

Social networks are the subject of some of the most exciting recent advances in the natural and social sciences. This course provides an introduction to the major discoveries in the field of social networks, particularly advances during the last decade. It also provides students with an introduction to the methods and software used to analyze and visualize social networks. Topics include the small-world puzzle (six degrees of separation), the strength of weak ties, centrality, complexity, thresholds ('tipping points'), and the spread of diseases and fads. Case studies used in the course include topics such as the contagion of suicides, social influence on musical taste, sexual relationships among adolescents, inter-organizational networks, and the network structure of the internet. Course readings are an engaging blend of popular social science texts, journal articles, and scientific papers.

SRPP-UH 3215 Quantitative Data Analysis (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall

This course covers how to analyze data and test theory from a practical perspective. The course begins with techniques for describing data and then moves to the basics of linear regression, a technique that allows researchers to ask how two variables are related to one another while controlling for other variables. The course explores how regression works as well as things that can go wrong with regression, examining diagnostics, errors and collinearity. The course also examines regression models for some special cases, such as yes/no dependent variables and special cases of data that are clustered, such as students located within the same schools. The course focuses on the interpretation of results, with particular emphasis on visualization to aid understanding of complex statistical models and nonlinear relationships, working with the statistical software R.

SRPP-UH 3410 Social Science Analysis of Global News (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall

How does one 'read the news'? It might be trickier than it sounds. The construction of what becomes 'news', its dissemination and interpretation are complex and inherently contentious social processes. Finding your way in the realm of mass communication, propagandistic conflicts, and public debate requires both theoretical lenses and good practical skills which this course intends to supply.

SRPP-UH 3412 Issues in African Societies (4 Credits)Typically offered Fall

In the broadest terms, the course's objective is to introduce students to some of the contemporary issues in Africa. These issues will be studied using a historical and sociological perspective. Following an introductory overview, part one of the course examines the scramble for Africa, colonialism and the legacies of colonialism, and the fights for independence. Part two of the course looks at growth, development, and corruption in Africa. The impact of foreign aid on development will be examined. In part three, the class shall explore cultural transformations coming out of Africa. The class will discuss the links between migration and development and African migration and incorporation in diasporas in the Global North. A major theme will be placing African societies in a global context, and throughout the course, the professor will use the continent to illustrate the costs and benefits of globalization for countries in the Global South.

SRPP-UH 3610 Public Policy Analysis: Case studies for Effective Formation and Implementation (4 Credits)

Typically offered Fall

This is an intermediate public policy class. Students will have the opportunity to build on skills introduced at the intro level: memo writing; drafting public policy press releases; preparation for long and short oral presentations; drafting talking points on policy issues, how to best frame policy challenges to explain proposed solutions and defend policy decisions. Students will also be asked to put together full dossiers on specific public policy issues to allow for policy makers to knowledgeably make effective decisions. The course will introduce students to wider theoretical frames and debates as well as crisis management. It will cover a wide range of global policy challenges revolving around issues such as strategic resources, energy, immigration, the climate crisis, health and security using current case studies. Students will explore the politics of policy-making and learn how to maneuver in a competitive policy environment as well as learning how to publicize policies through the maze of media outlets. Select speakers will share challenges and opportunities that they have encountered in the field based on the case studies that will be explored during the course.
