Program Description

At NYU, we believe that journalism has a critical public mission and can make a difference in a free and democratic society. Opportunities abound in the media world, but the opportunity to do compelling work that informs, engages, and matters is what drives our faculty, motivates our students, and shapes our basic approach.

Our coursework focuses on the basic skills of reporting, research, writing, and multimedia storytelling. Simultaneously students tackle ethics, learn journalism history, and consider what journalism can and should accomplish when informing the public. New York City is our laboratory, and students move seamlessly from the classroom into the city on assignments that take them all over town.

Given our place within the Arts and Science core of a leading university, the institute sees journalism as an essential strand in the liberal arts tradition. But we also recognize that news is a business. When our graduates enter that business, they are prepared to improve and enliven it. And even if they do not pursue careers in journalism, the training our students receive—the ability to read closely, engage in deep research, think critically, and write effectively—are essential for success in any career.

Honors Program

Juniors and seniors who have maintained a 3.65 overall GPA and a 3.65 GPA in the journalism major are eligible for the two-course, 8-credit honors program. Students take a special honors section of JOUR-UA 351 followed by JOUR-UA 352 Honors Senior Seminar to complete a two-semester capstone project. Students enrolled in honors may take a maximum of 40 credits in journalism.

Admissions

New York University's Office of Undergraduate Admissions supports the application process for all undergraduate programs at NYU. For additional information about undergraduate admissions, including application requirements, see How to Apply (<https://www.nyu.edu/admissions/undergraduate-admissions/how-to-apply.html>).

Program Requirements

The program requires the completion of 128 credits, including a second major in the College of Arts and Science. Thus, all journalism majors are double majors. Students pursuing the honors program take one additional journalism course, completing nine 4-credit courses for a total of 36 major credits.

Students may choose to take up to 36 credits in journalism (but no more); the only exception is for honors majors, who may take up to 40 credits (but no more).

Although students are generally encouraged to complete the core courses in sequence, some courses can be completed out of sequence and/or concurrently. Students may consult the undergraduate studies section of the journalism website for details about course prerequisites and sequencing.

All journalism majors must complete a second major in CAS. The majority of majors require between 8-10 courses (32-40 credits).

All journalism majors must complete a second major in CAS. The majority of majors require between 8-10 courses (32-40 credits), so students may need between 8-16 elective credits to reach 128 for the BA. Certain electives from other departments and programs can, with permission, be approved as electives for the journalism concentration. Because the institute puts a high value on numeric literacy, double majors in economics, politics, psychology, and sociology may count any of the following quantitative courses toward their three required electives:

- Economics ECON-UA 18 Statistics (P)
- Politics POL-UA 800 or POL-UA 850 Introduction to Research Methods for Politics
- Psychology PSYCH-UA 10 Statistics for The Behavioral Sciences
- Sociology SOC-UA 302 Statistics for Social Research

Tracks

Before completing the last two core courses in the major (The Beat and Advanced Reporting), journalism majors specialize by pursuing one of two tracks:

- The print/online track is designed for students who wish to focus on writing and reporting for print and online media.
- The broadcast track is for students who wish to focus on reporting and video production for broadcast media.

While students are not required to formally declare their track (and it will not be specified in Albert or on their diploma or transcript), they will need to choose which track they want to pursue before taking The Beat and Advanced Reporting and must commit to that track. Students cannot “mix-and-match” Beat and Advanced reporting sections from different tracks (i.e. they cannot take a broadcast section of Advanced Reporting after taking a print/online section of The Beat).

Sample Plan of Study

Broadcast or Print/Online Track. All Journalism majors must complete a second major in the College (here assumed to be nine courses).

Students must complete the College's Expository Writing requirement before enrolling in JOUR-UA courses.

Chosen by advisement from a list of approved courses.

Learning Outcomes

Upon successful completion of the program, graduates will have:

1. Strong research, reporting, and writing skills in print, online, video, and audio media, presented appropriately to the intended audience.
2. The ability to develop story ideas, interview subjects, conduct research, and evaluate information.
3. The ability to use technological tools and apply quantitative concepts and methods as appropriate.
4. A commitment to work ethically in pursuit of truth, accuracy, fairness, and diverse perspectives in informing the public and holding those in power accountable.

Policies

Policies Applying to Both Concentrations

1. Completion of either journalism major concentration exempts students from the College Core Curriculum's requirement in Societies and the Social Sciences.
2. The prerequisite for both JOUR-UA 50 and JOUR-UA 101 is completion of the College's expository writing requirement. Please see course descriptions for more detail on prerequisites and sequencing.
3. Students must achieve a grade of C (not C-) or better in all journalism courses to meet prerequisite requirements and count them toward the major. (Pass/Fail grades do not count.) Students earning grades lower than C must either repeat the course, or take an equivalent course if permitted.

4. All majors must complete a capstone piece in the required skills course Advanced Reporting, which allows for assessment of their progress at the conclusion of the major.

Policy on 2-Credit Courses

Journalism majors may take two (and no more than two) 2-credit JOUR-UA courses in lieu of one 4-credit course toward the elective requirement for the major (which is the completion of three electives/12 credits in total). Petitions to substitute 2-credit courses from outside the journalism department will not be considered. Journalism minors must fulfill their elective requirement by completing 4-credit electives.
